Getting some extra energy before the race

Baseball squad starts campaign Monday

It'll be a young baseball team Coach Pete Spieles will put on the diamond April 23 when Charlevoix opens the season at Central Lake.

The Rayders lost nine players off last year's team that went 10-6 in its maiden season. The Rayders finished in a second place tie in the Michigan-Huron Shores Conference.

Spieles has several holes to fill in the lineup. Graduation wiped out his entire outfield, half the infield, and the top pitcher. But Spieles does have six lettermen returning – Scott Morgan, Jerry Sladek, Gil Noirot, Jack Carlson, Phil Morrison and Bob Russell.

Morgan and Sladek will do most of the pitching this season. Morgan fashioned a 4-3 record last year while Sladek was 1-0, pitching primarily in relief.

Catching could be the team's strong point. Both Noirot and Carlson have experience behind the plate. Spieles said when one isn't catching he'll be in the outfield.

The outfield is unsettled with several candidates vying for a starting position.

There is a little more stability in the infield, however. It appears Jim Buchanan will start at first base and Phil Morrison will get the call at shortstop. Morrison hit near the .400 clip a year ago. Other contenders for infield slots include Scott Kelley, Mike Loper, Gary Drury, Jeff Drury and Bob Russell. Russell will most likely be in the lineup, but the junior is coming off knee surgery and Spieles is not sure what position is best suited for him. Buchanan, Kelley, Loper and Gary Drury, incidentally, are freshmen.

Because of the inclement weather, Spieles has not been able to conduct practice outdoors yet. Still, he believes, his team is "way ahead of last year."

The reason? A batting cage was purchased this year, enabling the team to take batting practice indoors.

The batting cage is not completely paid for. That's why the team will be active once again in Michigan's Operation Cleansweep from April 14-May 14. Team members will be going door-to-door throughout the community selling trash bags. There are 15 bags to a box. Boxes sell for $2 each.

Last year a pitching machine was purchased and financed the same way. Spieles said donations will be accepted if anyone would like to contribute.

Spieles has 24 players out for the team, and will carry 20 during the season. ("That's how many uniforms we have.")

Besides players already mentioned, Joe Herriman, Scott Kerridge, Kirk Heckendorn, Steve Mielke, Roxy VanLoo, Dave Cole, Larry Houghton, John Lockman, Mike Zednicek, Mike Bartz, Tony Star, Tom Mielke and Dave Olach are also competing for a spot on the roster.

Spieles expects Rogers City, the defending conference champ, to be the team to beat. He added that Gaylord should be strong, too. Saint Ignace has re-established its program this year after dropping it a year ago because of a financial pinch.

The Rayders will play at least 23 games this season (depending on tournament games). All weekday games start at 4 p.m. Saturday games start at 1 p.m. All games (except pre-district) are double-headers. Charlevoix play their home games at the senior league field next to the sheriff's department.

Following is the tentative schedule for this year:

Ex-offenders between 16-21 to get help through new program

The formulation of a new program geared to the needs of youthful ex-offenders in the 16 through 21 year age group has been announced by Gary Knapp, coordinator for the program.

Initiated as a pilot program in a six-county area of northwestern Michigan that includes Charlevoix, Emmet and Antrim counties, the program is an outgrowth of the Corrections Employment Service Program.

The parent program, C.E.S., has been placing adult ex-offenders in jobs in a 21 county area of northern lower Michigan since 1973.

In explaining the program, Knapp said "experience with adult ex-offenders has taught us that the best way to effect positive change is to get involved with offenders at a younger age. Past records also show that a person is less likely to commit a crime if he has a job. This is important because it contributes to a feeling of self-worth. It does away with idle time and, more importantly, it represents an investment."

The new Youth Program takes advantage of the knowledge and resources developed in the C.E.S. and places heavy emphasis on pre-employment training, alternative education and linkage with existing community resources.

"A job is not always an appropriate goal particularly for 16 to 18 year olds who often get into trouble after dropping out of school. Our intention is to emphasize return to school or some alternative program such as adult education, vocational skills training or individualized tutoring provided through the program's education counselors" Knapp explained.

"Education of some type, academic as well as vocational, counseling where it is needed, giving the person self-esteem, establising goals, both short and long term, ...these are things we are striving to accomplish" Knapp continued.

The organization is prepared to work with individuals if necessary or in groups Knapp explained, stating that one group has already been organized and is meeting regularly and plans to organize a second one underway.

The program is financed by the Governor's Discretionary Fund through the Department of Labor.

Knapp has been with the C.E.S. for four-years. This program covers the counties in the Gaylord diocese, a 21-county area. Referals come the courts, probation officers and similar sources.

In Charlevoix County, Knapp has worked with all the above mentioned agencies and has done counseling at the Charlevoix County jail. It was through the C.E.S. that the adult education program was initiated at the jail for short-time offenders.

The local contact person is Helen Kane who can be reached at the Native American Recovery Center, 547-4434. Knapp can be reached at 517-732-9379 in Gaylord.

Real Estate Is A People Business And Ski & Shore Wants You To Know Its People

This week Ski & Shore would like you to meet Lee Meilleur

"As a real estate consultant, I can offer customers a tangible good that can be financially rewarding as well as something that they can cherish."

Lee Meilleur, originally from the Detroit area, brings to Ski and Shore extensive sales and finance experience. He attended the University of Alaska while serving two years in the Army, received advanced training in an Army Finance School, published in The Army Times and formed a Curling Team; in addition to instituting a new payroll program for his base.

After returning to the Midwest, Meilleur was a manufacturing representative for Sunbeam Corporation and was also associated with Sperry Hutchinson Company as a representative. Lee then became involved in real estate. "After acquiring my real estate license, I sold educational courses to real estate firms and instructed classes at Business Management and Marketing Institute in Detroit. I also managed a local real estate office there. I became acquainted with Ski and Shore while in Detroit, it afforded me the opportunity to move North."

Meilleur is a sportsman and explains that the name Ski and Shore connotes the recreation available here and the office employs as well as services people who appreciate the beauty indigenous to this area.

FAITH REVEALS THE GOOD THINGS ABOUT OUR YOUTH

Our most unfairly maligned age group is the one consisting of older children and teenagers. Because of the spectacular, headline-making antics of a very small minority, our young people are routinely suspected of everything from noisy, insolent behavior and drug addiction to school vandalism and a willingness to knock an elderly woman to the ground for the few dollars in her handbag. In truth, the vast majority of our youth are friendly, respectful, enthusiastic, law-abiding, hardworking students; intent only on learning to make their way in the world and perhaps improving it in the process. If your training and influence have been reinforced by family attendance at the Church of your choice, then YOUR children undoubtedly belong to this praiseworthy majority.

The greatest reverence is due the young.
—Decimus Junius Juvenal (circa 50-130 A.D.)

'Even a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure, and whether it be right."
—Proverbs 20:11

Beaver Island

Airport gets $47,000 for lights

Charlevoix County's Beaver Island Airport has been allocated nearly $47,000 by the Michigan Aeronautics Commission to install new lighting facilities, State Representative Ralph Osthing (R-Roscommon) announced.

The oirport will receive $39,300 for lighting facilties, half of which will be poid with state funds and half with local funds. A $7,650 state loon has also been granted to supplement local funds for the lighting project at the airport.

"I am pleased that the state's Aeronautics Commission has agreed to allocate the Beaver Island Airport money to improve its facilities," Dstling said. "It is essential that we keep our airport facilities in good working order because thousands of passengers' lives depend on safe and modern flight faeilities."

Central Lake

Brownwood establishes key club

Brownwood Acres, the Northland's popular year 'round nightspot, has set aside a portion of their dining and entertainment center this summer as a 'key club' for their regular customer.

Brownwood's Gary Morse, one of the men responsible for the one-day renovation of the village of Central Lake, just three miles east, is introducing another creative idea this summer. During a ten week period, June 25 through Labor Day, Brownwood will have an exclusive area of dining and entertainment for their "good steady customers."

"Why should the people who patronize Brownwood regularly", says Morse, "have to stand in line during the summer with the one-time vacation transients. Brownwood is no longer just a 'summer' facility. We count on the summer and winter residents to support us throughout the year. It's only fair that we give them something special when they want it. I believe this key club is the answer."

Membership will be available in two categories: regular and special. The 'regular' membership fee actually rewards the good steady customer. The $150 deposit required is refunded in $10 credits each time the member dines during the ten week period. This credit appears in the form of a refund on the member's dinner check. Dine fifteen times during the summer and the membership is 'free'. "Special" membership key costs $35 for the same period but has no refunds when used. The important issue of these memberships is that the summer waiting lines will no longer exist. Membership keys will have a table waiting for holders and their guests.

Boyne Falls

Boyne had fewer skiers

The $145 million spent this winter at state ski areas surpassed last season's record dollar mark by 12 percent, according to Automobile Club of Michigan.

"The increased spending for the third straight season comes as a surprise when lodges responding to our season-end survey reported a warm Christmas holiday, then bitter cold and an early March thaw," states Joseph Ratke, Auto Club touring manager.

He said those factors were the major cause of a 1 percent drop in skiers this season compared to a year ago.

Ratke said the spending jump was mainly the result of increased costs of lift fees, food and lodging plus more night skiing and three more areas operating than in the past.

Auto Club based its figures on 40 of 58 lodges responding to a statewide survey which inquired about dollars spent, number of skiers, skiable days, opening and closing dates and skiers from other states visiting Michigan.

Twenty-three lodges reported increased spending, ranging from 5 to 41 percent. Three lodges reported spending was the same as last season and nine took in less money. The drop in those lodges with a spending decrease ranged from 1 to 50 percent.

Boyne Mt. and Boyne Highlands said that while skier numbers dropped by less than 1 percent, spending rose more than 7 percent.

Improved runs and the addition of night skiing drew 30 percent more skiers and upped spending 41 percent at Hilton Shanty Creek near Bellaire. Caberfae near Cadillac doubled its night skiers and recorded a 15 percent increase in spending overall.

Sugar Loaf near Traverse City, which experimented with a $15 daily lift ticket to help control weekend crowds, had 20 percent fewer skiers by a six percent spending increase for the season. Last winter, Sugar Loaf's lift fee was $12 daily.

"It worked out exactly the way we wanted," stated Sugar Loaf manager Bob Harris, who felt more of the state's lodges would follow suit next season to help improve crowded slope conditions.

Big Rock Nuclear Power Plant in cold shut down

By TOM DAMMANN
Special to the Courier

Big Rock Nuclear Power Plant is in a state of "cold shut down" indefinitely as a result of a leak of highly radioactive water discovered Friday morning.

Officials of Consumer Power Co., owners of the plant, and the State Department of Public Health insist that it was a "minor leak" in a thumble next to the reactor vessel.

"There has been no release of radioactivity outside the containment area whatsocver," Russel De Witt, manager for nuclear production at the Jackson-based utility, told a reporter on the phone Sunday afternoon.

His statement was supported later by Lee Jager, chief of the Bureau of Environmental and Occupational Health, Department of Public Health, who headed a three-man team sent here at Governor William G. Milliken's request Sunday.

"A briefing by company personnel and a visual inspection of the plant indicoted there were probably no radioactive materials released from the plant during the indicent," Jager said in a telephone interview Sunday.

He added, however, that he was taking water and air samples back to Lansing for testing.

Reached at his Lansing office Monday Jager explained that the testing takes three days to complete so that the results will not be known until Wednesday. He added that samples mailed by Consumers Power Friday may have been tested by late Tuesday.

He said that about 2 quarts of contaminated water from within the reactor vessel leaked into a vessel designed for the purpose and was to be recycled or treated.

"There was nothing to give us any reason to believe anything left the plant," Jager repeated. "Farther analysis will prove that one way or another."

The plant had been shut down since Feb. 2, first for routine maintenance and later because of some questions regarding a new safety device which were eventually rectified, sources told a reporter.

It was while testing some control valves and pipes – part of the slow process of starting up again – that the leak was discovered, DeWitt said.

"There is no emergency, contrary to rumor," he said heatedly.

He said that the district Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) office in Chicago had been notified Friday and that on agency man was due at Big Rock Tuesday.

Jager was highly critical of Consumer's communications on the incident.

"We were notified by the NRC Friday afternoon," he said. "We would prefer to be notified directly by the company."

Charlevoix County Sheriff George Lasater told a reporter that he is "furious", that it was only because a reporter called him for comment Saturday night that he learned of the leak.

Lasater in, turn telephoned Mrs. Alice Tunison, county Civil Defense Director to ask if she knew anything obout the leak only to find that she had not been informed either.

Advised of this Monday, George Weeks, Governor Milliken's executive secretary said. "The governor will sympathize with Sheriff Lasater and Mrs. Tunison."

Weeks said that in the wake of the accident at the Three Mile Island reactor near Harrisburg last month, Governor Milliken has been working on improving and tightening up both the safety controls and "process of information in the state's nuclear power industry."

He said Governor Milliken has written NRC asking that a safety inspector be permanently assigned at Big Rock.

According to Robert Heishman, chief of Reactor Operations and Nuclear Support Branch at NRC's Chicago Office, the commission has assigned a man to the D.C. Cook plant in Benton Harbor, who has not taken up residence yet, there is a resident inspector at Palisades, and that one is planned for Big Rock in 1981. He was not aware of the governor's request.

Heishman described Big Rock as old and not up to par with modern specifications but that it has been making progress in modernization of safety facibties. He said he is unaware of any rating of Big Rock regarding its safety record.

The plant is a boiling water reactor, different from that of Three Mile Island. It produces 1.5 percent of the electrieity sold by Consumers.

The fourth oldest plant in the country it was first of only two to be licensed to use plutonium.

Recently it asked NRC approval of a rearrangement of its waste storage facilities to enable it to quadruple the amount of nuclear waste that can be stored on site.

Maintenance workers discovered the leak Friday in a control rod mechanism at the bottom of the reactor vessel, which contoins the uranium fuel used to heat the water to make the steam turn the generators.

DeWitt said they were quite far from getting into actual operation Friday. He said that following normal procedures, pressure in the pipes that carry water from the reactor vessel to the turbines was brought up to 900 pounds per square inch Friday and a pipe began leaking "about seven to eight milliliters an hour."

When the pressure was reduced the leak stopped. The normal pressure level when operating is 1,350 pounds per square inch with water temperature at 582 degrees Fahrenheit.

Experts from General Electric, builders of the reactor, were expected Tuesday.

Organization formed to stop gill netting in area

A group of sport fishermen, concerned about the "depletion" of fish, primarily in northern Lake Michigan, has agreed to mentor - and possibly stop - gill net fishing in the Charlevoix area.

The group, called "Stop Gill Netting" (SGN), organized Thursday night at the Charlevoix Rod and Gun Club. About 150 sport fishermen - from Frankfort to Petoskey - attended.

"If we don't make a move at this point we can kiss our fishing goodbye for 10 years," said Robert Hybl, who was elected president of the organization.

Hybl said SGN members will patrol the northern Lake Michigan shoreline, and also inland waters, in an attempt to keep gill netters away.

Although Hybl said he is against violence, he did say SGN will take "action" if a ban, agreed upon by the state and two Upper Peninsula Indian tribes, fails.

The ban declares Lake Michigan - south of Good Hart - as off-limits for commereial fishing. The Bay Mills Indians and the Sault Ste. Marie Tribe of Chippewa Indians have agreed to the ban until May 15. It is expected by that time that Federal District Court Judge Noel Fox will reach a decision on Indian fishing rights.

Hybl told SGN members that "Indians violating the ban can expect to be met by this organization and other organizations who support us."

SGN members have been divided into regional patrols. They will communicate via CB radio and telephone.

"We can't afford to sit in a hold pattern and wait and see if they (Indians) obey the ban," Hybl explained.

A similiar ban was in effect in the fall. Several people say the ban didn't work.

"It was violated," said Hybl. "It meant nothing."

Charlevoix County Prosecuting Attorney Scott Beatty agreed.

"It was a joke," he said. "It was really a mess in the fall."

Beatty said he "doesn't know" if the latest ban will work either.

Beatty said he met two weeks ago with aides from the governor's office. At that time, he said, he told the state officials that another ban "would make no difference unless there were meaningful penalties."

State officials have been quoted as saying "the agreement will be more effective this year" because communication between the tribes, the Department of Natural Resources and the governor's office "is much better and quicker."

Last fall the DNR, by their own admission, was slow in reporting fishing incidents to tribe officials. As a result, only three Bay Mills fishermen appeared before a conservation committee for fishing north of Good Hart.

Each was fined $100.

Beatty said there is "heat on in Washington" from the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Department of the Interior to make this ban work.

Beatty said he will prosecute Indians without BIA cards caught gill netting in the area. He added that in gill netting arrests he will ask that the fishing equipment be confiscated. Indians with BIA cards will only be arrested, he said, for non-fishing violations, such as no life preservers and no boat registration.

The fine for gill netting for those without BIA cards is now $205 plus five days in jail, Beatty said.

Hybl, meanwhile, indicated that SGN was "not at war" with the Indians.

"This is a war against gill netting," he said. "It would make no difference if the gill netters were Polish, Lithuanian or Czechoslovakian."

So far this spring there have been no reported confrontations on the lakes.

"The only reason we haven't seen them here this spring is because they're netting like h—— near Alpena," Hybl said.

"A month from now when the ice is gone they're going to be down there (lake) like flies," said an SGN member. "If we can stop them in the next two months the fish will be out of the shallows."

"If we don't stop them now...they'll run wild," Hybl added.

Upper Peninsula Chippewas - who have BIA cards - reportedly are angered about the threats from the SGN.

Art LeBlance, chairman of the Bay Mills Chippewa Community in Brimley, told the Traverse City Record-Eagle "I think it's over-reaction by a group of radicals who don't understand what is going on. I hope they cool it down there, if at all possible."

LeBlance was also disturbed about the attempted arson late Thursday night of a shed and three boats belonging to Melvin Whinestone, a member of the Northern Michigan Ottawa Association, who lives near Atwood. State police are investigating the incident that caused minor damage to the boats.

Whinestone said he saw three people near the shed before the fire started. He said he also heard shotgun pellets hit his house.

Winstone countered, "Even though my house got shot at, I don't approve of guns."

A secret ballot vote was taken on the question "Should members of NMOA carry guns while fishing or transporting fish?" The "no" vote won 15 to 5. Following the vote the group agreed to not fish singly and to ask the press to observe them.

The group had convened originally to set their fishing plans for spring. They postponed any decisions on whether to fish and risk arrest until Federal District Court Judge Noel Fox's decision is handed down. The committee will meet on the first Saturday following Judge Fox's

$700,000 bond issue on ballot

Voters in the Charlevoix School District will decide Monday the fate of a $700,000 bond issue.

If approved, the money will be used to build an addition to the high school.

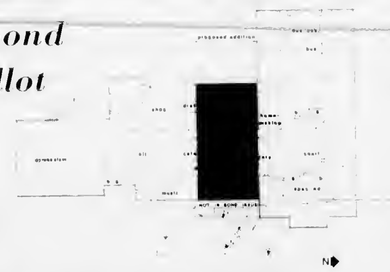
The building addition would enclose the outdoor area between the two buildings at the high school. It would include 12,720 square feet.

"The task force suggested a building program that they felt would meet the problems and needs of the high school, but at a cost to the taxpayers more economical than the projects presented in the past," Tom LaBlance, chairman of the task force, stated.

The addition, school officials say, would relieve overcrowding in the library, cafeteria and science areas. It would also take students out of the portables, conserve energy and keep the high school accredited with North Central.

According to officials, the building would be paid off in approximately 11 years. Interest on an 11 year bond for $700,000 would be about $300,000.

To the average home owner, officials add, the increase in taxes will be somewhere between $10 and $20 per year. If final bids on the project are lower than the $700,000 bond, then the millage rate would be reduced.



Also, officials note, most senior citizens will "not have a tax increase" because of the "circuit breaker." The "circuit breaker" is a form the graduate property tax." The lower your income, the less you pay in property tax. Senior citizens are entitled to a rebate of up to 100 percent of all property taxes in excess of 3.9 percent of their income.

Polls ot the Charlevoix Elementary School will be open from 7 a.m. until 8 p.m. All school electors who are registered with the city or township clerk of the city or township in which they reside are eligible to vote.

Following is a series of questions and answers on the election:

WHY IS THE ADDITION NEEDED?

Even with the declining enrollment, a need will exist for more space, especially in science, library, cafeteria and drafting.

TAKE STUDENTS OUT OF THE PORTABLES.

The portables have lasted well beyond their bfe expectancy and must have much major maintenance done on them if we continue to use them for classrooms.

ENERGY CONSERVATION.

Presently the doors between the buildings and those close to the portables are opened thousands of times each day. But enclosing the area between the buildings, this problem would be eliminated.

ACCREDITATION. Charlevoix High is the only North Central accredited school in the county.

HDW MUCH WILL IT COST?

It depends on the final bids. The bond issue is for $700,000. If the cost is less, the millage rate will be reduced. The estimated interest would be $301,000 for a total of $1,001,000.

The millage required to pay for the bond issue would be about ¾ of a mill. It would cost most homeowners between $10 to $20 per year.

Because of the "circuit breaker" most Senior Citizens would not have a tax increase.

HOW LONG WILL IT TAKE TO PAY FOR THE ADDITIDN?

Eleven years. This is one reason why the interest paid is very low compared with bond issues proposed in the past.

Society kick-off

The American Cancer Society will kick-off its Charlevoix County campaign May 2 at the Grey Gables.

All workers are urged to attend the social gathering at 12:30 p.m. That will be followed by a presentation at 1 p.m. from Dr. James Gels.

Ottawa Indians will not carry guns

By SARA GAY DAMMANN
Special to the Courier

Indian commereial fishermen, members of the non-reservation Northern Michigan Dttawa Association (NMOA) agreed Saturday that they would not carry guns nor would they offer their organization's support to anyone who did.

Meeting at the home of Waunetta Dominic, president of NMOA, in Petoskey, the Michigan United Indian Conservation Club, the fishing committee of NMDA, heatedly debated the question of arming themselves for protection.

Citing recent and past violent confrontations with non-Indian sportsfishermen, many people expressed fear for their safety.

Vice-chairman of the group, George Anthony of East Jordan, and Mrs. Dominic argued that carrying guns would not serve as protection.

"The minute you have a gun others will have to assume you will use it and it will become just a matter of who is the quickest draw," Anthony argued.

Others, recalling the incident in Atwood Thursday night when Melvin Winstone's home was attacked by unknown persons, argued that they would protect themselves.

Charlevoix Yesterday

THE "LAWRENCE", THE "GAZELLE", and THE "MINNIE WARREN", shown here clustered together, were familiar sights in Charlevoix 100 years ago. In 1870, the "Minnie Warren" helped open the first channel into Pine Lake. The "Lawrence" was a sister ship of the ill-fated "Champlain" and served the area until it was retired in the early 1890's. The little "Gazelle" was the "taxi" of its day, making the run from Boyne City to Charlevoix in one hour and 20 minutes. (Photo from Bob Miles' Collection, courtesy of Charlevoix Historical Society)

The Courier will welcome any pictures of early Charlevoix which readers are willing to share. They will be handled carefully and returned to the owners.

Fershee, Lasater tour state prison

District Judge, David W. Fershee, a member of the Prisons and Corrections Committee of the State Bar of Michigan, recently toured the State Prison of Southern Michigan in Jackson and also attended a community forum at Michigan State University on the topic of "Should Michigan Build More Prisons?"

The judge invited Charlevoix County Sheriff George Lasater to tour the prison with him and both came away overwhelmed by the size of the facility, the number of inmates and the problems posed by each. The prison is the largest penal facility of its type in the world. Within its walls alone, there are more than 57 acres. The entire complex contains 3885 cells for general population.

The judge said the prison is presently overcrowded, outdated, and poses problems concerning inmate processing and control.

He said the Department of Corrections has plans for building several more prisons in various regions of Michigan, but some citizen groups have expressed opposition to the plans. Their feeling is that prisons will not be effective in dealing with crime and criminals and the great expense for construction and maintenance would not be justified.

The Department of Corrections supplied the judge with information indicating that there were 14,709 prionsers in Michigan as of July, 1978 which is more than 2,000 over the rated capacity. There are 48,000 persons under felony sentences in Michigan. The majority are on probation; others are on parole or in community halfway houses. A large part of the problem is that there has been a shift in policy which has classified more of the 48,000 to prison and fewer to probation over recent years. With a pool of 48,000 it does not take a profound shift to add several thousand to the prison count.

Violence is not the answer in fishing dispute

U.S. District Court Judge Noel Fox is expected to reach a decision in two weeks on the rights of Indian tribal members to fish the Great Lakes unhampered by Michigan fishing regulations.

Until that decision - and perhaps even after - the possibility of a violent confrontation between sport fishermen and Indians exist.

Two Upper Peninsula tribes, the Bay Mills Indian Community and the Sault Ste. Marie Tribe of Chippewas, have both agreed not to commercially fish Lake Michigan south of Good Hart until May 15.

A similar agreement last fall failed. As a result a couple of battles were nearly waged.

We see nothing wrong aboot a group of sport fishermen working together to solve fishing problems. As long as it does within the framework of the law. We do not accept violence as a solution of the gillnet dilemma.

The sport fishermen and the Indians will be tested in the next few weeks. It is our hope that cool heads prevail.

How does education rate? Vote 'Yes' on April 30th

Editur:

As we celebrate the centennial of the incorporation of the village of Charlevoix and people throughout many nations observe the International Year of the Child, why not as part of our observance of the two events vote "Yes" at the school election on April 30th?

The Board of Education and a task force have agreed that in order to relieve overcrowding at the high school, a bond issued to construct an addition will be voted upon April 30, 1979.

A delightful account of early efforts to provide education in Charlevoix is recorded in "The Traverse Region", published in 1884. The first school built in 1861 in the Belvedere area was a log building 16'x18' with a "shake" roof and puncheon floor.

In the fall of 1867, "the dozen or so white families" decided the school house was too small – or, to be more correct, the account relates that it was the women who began working for a new school. Three weeks from the time of the first inception of the project, a fair was held on December 6 to raise money for a new school. Although a winter storm occurred that night, nearly every inhabitant came to the fair. The women offered hand made articles for sale. In fact, the items were first sold before the fair, then the first purchasers put up the items for auction, so that two receipts were realized for each item, with all the money going into the common fund.

After the sale, an oyster supper was enjoyed. One of the women attending wrote these lines: "They had oysters, real oysters, don't you think – a dish almost unknown in those days except in name – and they were dealt out by good big dishfuls – not a little soup with one poor little oyster swimming around all alone."

After the supper, nearly everyone present received a letter – in prose or verse. In order to receive his letter, the recipient was required to pay postage to help the receipts of the evening.

Several people during those three weeks had worked to compose the letters.

About $75 was taken in and used in the following spring to help build a new school. This frame building stood at the corner of State and Antrim.

Those people of the early days of Charlevoix showed by their work that they regarded education as a high priority in their list of values.

Voters of Charlevoix School District, how high does education rate in your list of priorities? Why not vote "Yes" on April 30th?

Wood's Creek revisited

Every spring I am swept by a primordial urge to try my hand once again at smelt dipping. The feeling lasts for as many hours as it takes me to dredge up a Clockwise column which appeared in the Courier April 20, 1966. I read it through once – hastily – and I am satisfied to stay away from smelt streams for another year.

My only smelt dipping excursion took place under the tutelage of Tom McDaniels, former business manager of the Charlevoix Courier who pursued the wily smelt with the tenacity of a big game hunter. Our comrade-at-arms that awful night was Jon Scull, my brother-in-law.

Following are excerpts from that column, in the event you have been afflicted with smelt fever.

Just when I was thinking that there probably wasn't another living soul all the way to Boyne City, Tom suddenly swung off the road and stopped in a tiny clearing. Ahead I could see a half dozen parked cars and several people milling about in the flicker of coal oil lamps and flashlights.

No where was there a roaring fire, nor the happy sound of robust male voices raised in song as I had expected. We unpacked our nets and pails and moved over to a small bridge where the road crossed Wood's Creek. The voices stopped as we approached, and although nuthing was said, I had a distinct feeling we weren't exactly welcome.

"Tom flashed a light into the water, revealing nothing more than clear water rushing over a bed of pebbles.

"It'll be a while yet," he said evenly. "Want to walk down to the lake?"

Not having any other immediate plans, Jon and I followed as Tom began slogging through heavy grass along the bank. We had gone no more than 40 or 50 feet when the men back on the road started calling: "Come back! Stop! Don't go near the river!" We stopped and noticed that several lamps and flashlights were approaching us hurriedly from the bridge.

"What's your trouble?" Tom asked, with ill-disguised annoyance in his voice.

"We don't want anyone in the stream until the smelt are well started," said a faceless voice. "They've started down by the lake now, but they're frightened even if you walk on the bank. They feel vibrations."

Well, there was considerable talk about who owned this blankety-blank land in the first place and who was going to throw whom in the creek. Finally one of our unknown antagonists spoke up: "It's the law of the creek," he said.

This was too good to be true. I could see the situation rapidly deteriorating into a free-for-all, several people getting themselves run through with net handles, and Hollywood someday making a movie of the incident, calling it "Law of the Creek."

Our smelt-stream lawyer went on to explain that it is traditional for the first fisherman at the site to determine when the run is un, and no one is allowed to enter the creek until he says it's all right.

"Old Frank was the first one here tonight, so old Frank gets to say when we go in the creek. Right Frank? It's the law of the creek," he repeated savoring the term as if he had just made it up.

Finally about 11 p.m., there seemed to be considerable commotion over near the stream. We grabbed our nets and hurried over on the double. The erowd at the bridge had grown alarmingly and a dozen or more people already were in the creek, stirring up the now roily water with their nets.

Determined to catch my share of smelt, I jumped down a steep bank into the creek. Unfortunately, instead of landing on the pebbly botton, I hit a clay sink hole and kept right on going, toppling over into the water.

"There's a big one," said an extremely unkind woman standing on the bank laughing at me. She took several jabs at me with her net as I struggled to get back on my feet. I never knew water could be so cold without freezing. My boots were filled and my trousers and my $9 woolen jacket from Penney's were soaked.

From here on the story is anticlimactic. I did catch a few smelt which looked quite surprised finding me at the other end of the net, having met so recently as a denizen of their own environment. Counting what Tom and Jon caught, we had 14 fish before calling it quits – a far cry from the traditional washtub foll.

So that's my smelt dipping story. I felt quite bad about our limited catch for years until I learned last spring that another editor of the Courier had returned from a dipping expeditiun with only one and one-half smelt in his ereel. I can't imagine what happened ta the other half.

Ironton Ferry to be equipped with radio

When the Ironton Ferry starts operation for the season, it will be equipped with a two-way radio with which to receive calls for emergency service.

It will be used to alert the ferry operator when an ambulance, fire equipment, or police car has to make a hurried call across the South Arm.

The radio was first requested by Eveline Township, where the ferry is located. The township offered to pay $235, or one-third of the cost of installing the radio. The Charlevoix County Road Commission and the County Board of Commissioners later agreed to pay the other two-thirds of the costs.

A 'Wizard of Oz' fanatic

Can you believe it? It's only been a month since I last saw "The Wizard of Oz" on television and already I am having withdrawal symptoms.

I see the Tin Man's face in every oil can, the Yellow Brick Road in my kitchen wax build-up, and the Wicked Witch in every store where I am trying to cash a check with only one ID.

Since "The Wizard of Oz" was filmed in 1939, it has been on television 21 times. Do you know what that means? It means Dorothy's clothes have come back to style six times and are currently "in" again.

I take nothing away from the mystical land of Oz. It is a beautiful children's story that should be seen by generations for years to come.

I am only saying that after nearly a quarter of a century of viewing it, you get a little strange.

The first time I saw the movie I was beside myself with the horror of the tornado hitting Dorothy's simple farmhouse in Kansas. how I shrieked and screamed in suspense when I saw her little bed turn and spiral toward the unknown.

By the eighth time f had seen it, I was able to ignore Dorothy's screams that the sky is falling in around her and, in fact, left the room to check a cake of yeast in the refrigerator to see if it had expired.

By the 16th time I saw "The Wizard of Oz," I did a curious thing. I actually applauded when the tornado sucked up Toto and yelled to the Wicked Witch, "Ga for it!" I don't know why I did that.

My kids have a polite way of putting it. They say I am "over the rainbow," no longer a childlike faith in goodness, or want to see anything from 1939 that looks better than I do.

That just isn't true. I love the classics and hope they'll be with us for a long time. But somehow, I dread the day when "Gone With the Wind" is being shown for the 97th time and as I watch Melanie writhe in the pain of childbirth while Atlanta is under siege, I yell at the set, "You think you got troubles now, Bunkie, wait until that ride in the buckboard back to Tara!"

I'll know the magic is gone.

A little sunburn from the 'sunshine' law

WASHINGTON – After a long, agonizing struggle which reached the Supreme Court, the Watergate tapes were made public and a Presidency collapsed. Now we have the "nuclear tapes," the verbatim transcript of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's (NRC) closed-door meetings during the Three Mile Island accident. We truly live in the era of "Let the Sunshine In."

Since the law requires such federal agencies to either open their meetings to the public, or provide tapes or transcripts of them afterwards, many a bureaucrat or commissioner in this town might well be pondering how he can hold his tongue when the discussion gets heated or the problem seems insoluble.

When the nuclear tapes were released last week, there was great huzzahing here about how confused the commissioners were with the difficult situation at Three Mile Island, how they spent an unusual amount of time fretting over media reaction, and how little thinking had gone into the prospect of population evaeuation.

When NRC Chairman Joseph M. Hendrie says, "We are operating almost completely in the blind," the unsuspecting citizen might figure nobody knows what's going on in nuelear. Freedom-of-the-press zealots could also be dismayed to read Chairman Hendrie's question and answer: "Which amendment is it that guarantees freedom of the press? Well, I am against it."

And so on and so on, with one commissioner voicing acerbic criticism of Dr. Ernest Sternglass, the nuclear skeptic and warning of the dangers of getting into a urinating contest with him. ("He's going to do it all over you because he's not restrained ...")

I am not one bit bothered in reading even portions of the 800-page transcript of those NRC meetings. I would be startled to learn that the participant's veins had ice-water running through them.

Indeed, the human quality of the transcript comes through richly (even a suggestion that someone go out to McDonald's for hamburgers), and only enhance the nation that when people are charged with heavy responsibility during a crisis, it is best for them to ventilate.

Is it not part of the creative process for people in such situations to reveal their apprehension, to engage in hyperbole, humor and even extravagant talk? They are trying to get at the truth, deeide nn a course of aetion and relieve a dangerous situation. These are people, not Star Wars robots. The transcripts of the long hours of this ordeal should be read like a play, not like a document that the Watch and Ward Society or Ralph Nader would relish.

After those 800 pages of conversation, what do we have? Well, we have acres ond acres of newsprint coverage and equal quantities of the stuff on the electronic media. We have an imperiled nuclear plant, relief from that peril, now cooled down with no loss of life or serious injury. We have congressional committees probing this accident, even assisting the press by getting copies of the transcript, so, perhaps, the committee's purpose can be served. And we have Public Law 94-109 (the "Sunshine Act") at work.

The NRC's implementation of the 1970 "Sunshine Act" requires public disclosure, by transcript, of such closed meetings, although there is a review first to determine what material can be excepted. None was in the case of the meetings dealing with the Three Mile Island accident.

But the NRC can withhold information affecting: national security; the "proprietory" interest of a company, meaning its ability to be competitive; the fitness and reputation of personnel; criminal matters and invasion of privacy; pre-decisional material, so the commission won't tip its hand, and subpocnaed material. But with everything else, it's Olly, Olly Oxen Free.

Let no one be uncharitably harsh on the NRC commissioners for their taped utterances. We should realize that the law does not require that other momentous meetings be taped. I can think of: editorial and/or news conferences at newspapers and broadcast stations; consultant sessions among surgeons; closed meetings of corporate or union boards or directors; even of Watergate Prosecutor Leon Jaworski and his gung-ho staff eager to put Richard Nixon behind bars.

Expletives wouldn't be the only form of communication that the aforementioned souls would want deleted if their deliberations, ruminations and outbursts were taped.

I also think it is amusing that the same Congress which enacted "Sunshine" legislation is often secretive itself. But all I really ask is that we be tolerant of anything taken out of context from taped proceedings, lest we put ourselves to the test of taping our own lives. If we're going to live with sunshine, we ought to be able to take a little radiation.

Be an informed consumer

In today's complex world, one gets the feeling you almost need to be a lawyer to be an "Informed Consumer." The variety of goods and services, claims and counterclaims in todays market place can seem overwhelming to the average customer.

National Consumer decisions can be made by having all the facts and information available and understood.

The choices we make in the Market reflect our self understanding, and needs. You need to know what you want and why you want it. Only you and your family can make this decision.

The next step is to learn all about a product and the alternate choices. Compare brands, prices, sizes and models.

It is also important to know your rights and responsibilities as a consumer. If after careful selection you feel a product is unsatisfactory you have the right and responsibity to make this feeing known.

There are several options for making your concerns known. You may seek the help of an attorney, contact regulatory agencies or the manufacturer. There are two sources of information available at the Cooperative Extension Service Office in Bellaire, you might want to request. One is a pamphlet Landlord-Tenant Rights and the other is a Directory of Federal Consumer Offices. Both of these are good resources for people with various Consumer Concerns.

Rabies still has scientists baffled

Northern Michigan curtains a variety of biting animals such as dogs, cats, fox, skunks, and bats. Any of these animals can transmit rabies.

Even though medical science has defeated polio, sinallpox, developed dramatic heart transplant procedures, and recently gave birth to the worlds first test-tobe baby, rabies still has medical science baffled. Rabies have been plaguing mankind for centuries.

Rabies is caused by a virus that is yet to be classified, but under observation with the electron microscope, it has been indicated to have similar symptoms of the influenza virus family. Although the virus may be observed, it is not easily examined.

People of all ages may contact rabies if conditions are favorable. Many times children are the victims because they play with and handle small animals. Anyone handling animals, especially sportsmen, and campers are all in a high risk group due to exposure to potential rabie sources.

The disease may occur at any time and anywhere during the year. Even though locally the greatest exposure occurs in the warmer months when these animals are more active.

Rabies is transmitted to man through bits such as scratches in the skin. The saliva of rabid animals carries the virus in respiratory secretions which are passed on to the vietim through bites or scratches from infected animals.

Bits on the hands, shoulders, head or neck are considered more dangerous than bits in other areas because of their close proximity to the brain. Deep bites merit more attention than scratches or abrasions, although all three can transmit rabies.

Most authorities agree that the incubation period in man has wide variation depending upon the severity and location of the bite. Experts feel that the incubation can be thirty to sixty days or even longer. In dogs for example, the period ranges from three to eight weeks. Thus, most cases will manifest themselves in dogs prior to developing signs and symptoms in man.

Determining rabies in an animal is done by catching, confining and observing the animal for 10 days to two weeks. Infected animals rarely survive for more than 10 days after development of the symptoms. If symptoms develop the animal is usually killed and the brain is examined. It is very impurtant not to damage the animal's head while trying to capture it. If the annual shows rabies symptoms, the district health department should be notified.

If a biting animal escapes or is unknown, the following factors are used to determine risk: prevalence of rabies in the area, species of biting animal, severity of the wounds, and whether or not the attack was provoked or unprovoked. Domestic animals that come in contact with wild animals should be vaccinated for protection.

Once a person has been bitten by an animal that is suspeeted of carrying rabies certain steps should be taken to minimize the infection. The bite should be cleansed immediately and thoughly washed with soap and water to remove saliva. Squeezing the wound to promote free bleeding is an aid to the cleansing action. The victim should be taken to medical help at once so that the treatment may be started if deemed necessary.

Regardless of the method used to treat the victim, it will take time. Mnst treatments should be started as soon as possible to allow the body to build a proper defense against rabies.

Lions here for benefit game

Al Baker

Luther Blue

Al (Bubba) Baker made his name known in National Football League circles last fall sacking opposing quarterbacks.

At the end of the season, Baker was honored for his play by winning NFL Rookie-of-the-Year honors.

But Baker can do more than just harass quarterbacks. He can also play basketball. In fact, the 6'6" giant was a two sport star at Colorado State University.

Baker is just one of several Detroit Lions who are expected to be here Friday, April 27 for a benefit basketball game against the Charlevoix Public Schools faculty.

Tipoff is at 8 p.m. at the Charlevoix High School gymnasium. The game will be sponsored by the Charlevoix Band Boosters and the American Legion. Adult tickets will be $2, student $1.50 and children 12 and under $1. Proceeds from the game will be used to help finance the Charlevoix Marching Band trip to the Holland Tulip Festival in May.

Besides Baker, other Lions on the "All Star" basketball team are: Luther Blue, Dexter Bussey, Gary Danielson, David Hill, J.D. Hill, James Hunter, Horace King, Paul Naumoff, Ed O'Neil, Freddie Scott, Leonard Thompson, Charlie Weaver, Tom Skladany, Larry Tearry and Levi Johnson.

How does Charlevoix Coach LeRoy Buchanan plan to beat the Lions?

Well, to start with, Buchanan has recruited some of the best basketball talent in the school system. Donning Charlevoix uniforms will be: Vane (Magic) Smith, Roy Fortin, Gary Stutzman, Pete Spieles, Roger Gowell, Dave Moyer, Barry Pierce, Hal Evans, Henry Wagner, Stan Martin, Ron Cox, Brian Molitor and Gordon Van Wieren.

Still, questions remain.

Will Buchanan have his team try and run against the Lions, who have sprinters like Blue, Hunter and Thompson? Or will his club slow the tempo down and mix it up underneath with Baker and Hill?

Find out the answers Friday night.

Following is the Lions "All Star" roster:

Softball squad working hard, open season at Central Lake

Charlevoix High School will field its first girls' softball team this season with Mary Gengle as coach and Georgia Lusk as her assistant.

Though this is the school's first team, most of the players have had experience in the community's summer program.

"We are a young team with only four seniors on the squad. However, I think we will do well because everyone is working so hard to earn a starting assignment" Coach Gengle said.

The team opens its season at Central Lake against a team that went to the state finals last season. This will be the first in a nine-game series.

Positions have not been earned at this time and Coach Gengle has not named her starting nine. However, she has listed candidates for the various positions.

Potential pitchers are Melinda Klooster, Colleen LaBlance and Holly Taber; catchers, Chris Lehman, Teresa Noirot and Debbie Shores.

In the in field candidates are Amy Kroll, Brenda Buchanan, Shari Jones and Carolyn Loper, first base; Sherrie Selissen, Colleen Harnett and Janet Pence, second base; Noirot and Lehman, short stop; Jackie Paul, Lisa Boss and Leslie Wood, third base.

Some of the above players along with Sue Smith, Bambi Balch and Margo Smith will fill the outfield positions.

Mel Kerridge, recovering from a basketball injury, is the student manager.

The players collected empty pop bottles and cans throughout the community and turned them in to earn funds for their uniforms, Coach Gengle said. She extended the appreciation and gratitude of the team to residents of the school district who have donated gloves, a chest protector, mitts, gloves, bats and other equipment to the young team. Only transportation is provided by the school district.

Home games will be played at the Carpenter Ave. softball diamond at the City Softball park.

Real Estate Is A People Business And Ski & Shore Wants You To Know Its People

This week Ski & Shore would like you to meet

Alyce Lesser

Alyce Lesser lives in and loves Charlevoix. She and her husband, Harry Lesser Jr. were summer residents of Charlevoix for many years but were prompted to move here permanently by their love of a small town lifestyle and the year around sports that this community offers. However; Alyce remarks "real estate has ruined my golf game."

After attending Washington University in St. Louis, Missouri; Alyce married and raised three daughters there while serving on several civic boards and being involved with volunteer work. Alyce finds it fulfilling to now be in the business world. "Continuing with my own life is exciting and personally rewarding."

When Mrs. Lesser began selling real estate in Charlevoix there were very few women involved in the field. She notes that the number of professional women associated with real estate is increasing and believes that women have an integral place in the consulting and selling of it. She has attended real estate seminars and stresses the importance of learning all phases of the profession.

Real Estate in Charlevoix is interesting because it involves various propnperty transactions: homes, condominiums, farms and waterfront property, etc. "It may have ruined my golf game, but my experience here in the Charlevoix Ski and Shore office is invaluable and I enjoy working with people."

Story hour attracts throng of kids

The third story hour of the year was held in the lower level of the library nn Saturday morning and was attended by over 50 area children. The new-found enthusiasm for the program can be attributed to the efforts of Kathy Hynes and Phyllis Hess, mothers themselves, who feel the hour is one well spent for their own as well as all the small children of the community. Participating in the activities were Edith Hess, who performed with marionettes for the children and Kathy Hynes, who read stories. There was also a short literary movie and each child received a play umbrella in keeping with the theme of the day "Rain". One more program is planned for the school year. It is tentatively set for May 19. Photographs by Anne Kelly.

A master of suspense

For those who feel a certain affinity for James Bond 007 and were compelled to see Richard Dreyfus muddle his way through "The Big Fix," Graham Greene's latest novel. "The Human Factor" will give you the real stuff out of which intrigue and suspense is created.

Saturday Review calls Greene "The inventor of the modern spy...No man writing today is more a master of suspense." The plus is a Graham Greene trademark: the additional element nf some particular human trait of the main character which leads to a moral dilemma. Rather than detracting from the whole, it is this tragic flaw if you will, which adds a new fictional dimension.

The moral dilemma of Maurice Castle, British Secret Service agent involved in project UNCLE REMUS, a South African assignment is one of loyalty. The human factor of which he is guilty, is that of having a heart in the midst of all the secrecy and propriety which his work demands.

Castle is married to a South African black whom he fell in love with while gathering espionage materiil in Pretoria. In order to remove Sarah and her young son from Africa, so that they might continue their relationship together as a normal family, Castle commits a serious demeanor. Bantu racial laws forbade their marriage, therefore he must emigrate them surreptitiously.

The Secret Service, needing to stay on the sunny side of local authorities, could offer no ostensible assistance. Castle was forced into accepting the help of a Communist agent whom he had befriended while on his mission. It is this favor which eventually leads to request for a favor in return and entangles Castle in the precarious role of double agent. Castle, being no Communist at heart, wears the mark of traitor upon his soul like a scarlet letter. There is only one thing more important to him than his love for Sarah and Sam and that is peace of mind.

Suspense builds as a web of circumstance unfolds and finds Secret Service authorities discovering a leak in security. Castle's burden becomes even more ponderous when a wrong assumption is made and the wrong man is murdered. His fate and that of his family are even more in jeopardy now. An escape is questionable.

The conclusion brings to mind the fact that the plans and plots persons, and nations are subject to the very weak links of the chain they depend upon for support. That no matter how immense the plan there is still the human factor to deal with.

Greene's novel is aptly prefaced by the following bit of wisdom of Joseph Conrad:

"I only know that he who forms a tie is lost. The germ of corruption has entered into his soul."

Castle in retrospect, seems to me to have been a victim of circumstance in his very corruption. To have to choose between one's heart and one's country is not much of choice. Which is the very feeling I was left with. He deserved more than nothing, didn't he?

SPRING IN CHAHLEVOIX

The calendar says that spring is here, and we are beginning to believe it.
The big wind storm has come and gone;
The people at North Point with no power for 3 days are warm again. They eat warm food, and have water, and are not afraid their water pipes will burst or their pumps freeze
Easter has also come and gone.
It was cloudy and cold, but not freezing.
Lake Michigan, with vast stretches of free water, is piling up flow ice on the beaches.
Lake Charlevoix has begun to thaw and the snow is piled up only in the woods und where the plows have left it.

Penple are taking walks or riding bicycles in the brisk, fresh air and strong sunlight.
The crocus is showing color, leal buds are fat,
And the maple sap is running, a sweet promise of good things to come.
Spring is here!

CHARLEVOIX COUNCIL MINUTES

April 16, 1979
7:30 p.m.

The Common Council of the City of Charlevoix met on the above date and time with Mayor Supernaw presiding. Councilmen present: Whitley, Porter, Timms, Roloff, Wood, and Muma. Absent: None.

The Minutes of the April 2, 1979 regular meeting were approved as presented in writing and as recorded in the Council Minutes Book.

Mr. Philip Armstrong of Great Lakes Energy Systems, appeared before Council with a short presentation of his Company's Mehrkam wind system. He stated that wind turbine generators could be introduced as a source of energy into the City's power mix at an approximate cost of .05 per kilowatt hour.

Moved by Councilman Porter and supported by Councilman Timms to accept and file the City Planning Commission Minutes dated April 9, 1979. Motion was adopted by the following yea and noy vote. Yeas: Councilmen Whitley, Porter, Timms, Roloff, Wood and Muma. Nays: None. Absent: None

The Acting City Manager reported that a study of the City's insurance coverage as reviewed by Northern Michigan Consulting Services indicates that the City's rates are not out-of-line and that Charlevoix Agency is doing a fine jub for the City as its local agency.

Council briefly discussed a Status Report on the Water Loss Survey as submitted by Granger Engineering, Inc. The report stated that the City is pumping approximately 50% more water than is being billed, and, although it was concluded that the water losses are due to leaks in the system, no major leaks had been found to date.

Moved by Councilman Wood and supported by Councilman porter to include the Charlevoix Public School Tax in the summer tax collection for 1979 and splitting the School Tax equally between winter and summer taxes. Motion was adopted by the following yea and nay vote. Yeas: Councilmen Whitley, Porter, Timms, Roloff, Wood and Muma. Nays: None. Absent: None.

A Public Hearing was held regarding the rezoning of a parcel of land behind the Holiday Gas Station from C-1 to R-4 as requested by Economic Development group. John Michael, representing Economic Development, stated that the property had only recently been acquired, and if rezoned, would become part of the low-income housing project proposed for that area. Council pointed out that the property previously rezoned to R-4 for the project had reverted to its original zone as construction of the project had not commenced within the specified time period. Mr. Michael stated the delay was due to the length of time required to secure backing for the project. Moved by Councilman Muma and supported by Councilman Timms that the Prankiyn W. Smith property as rezoned by Council on September 18, 1978, continue as an R-4 zone lor 60 days from this date; and, that, the parcel of land described below also be rezoned from C-1 to R-4 for 60 days with permanent rezoning of these parcels contingent upon initiation of construction of the low-income housing project as proposed for this site within the 60 day period.

Land located in the City of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix, State of Michigan, described as follows: Beginning 660 feet East and 660 feet South of the Northwest corner of Section 35, Town 34 North, Range 8 West; thence East 165 feet; thence North 176 feet; thence West 165 feet; thence South 176 feet to the point of beginning.

Motion was adopted by the following yea and nay vote. Yeas: Councilmen Whitley, Porter, Timms, Roloff, Wood and Muma. Nays: None. Absent: None.

A Public Hearing was held regarding the request by Captain's Watch Condominium for variances which would allow them to reduce their required side yard setbacks from 40' to 25' to accommodate construction of carports. John Michael, representing the Sand Castle Condominium, stated that his clients are opposed to the variances being granted as Captain's Watch has sufficient land to construct the carports and remain within the present zoning requirements. Moved by Councilman Timms and supported by Councilman Whitley that the required side yard setbacks at Captain's Watch Condominium be reduced from 40' to 25'. Motion was denied by the following yea and nay vote. Yeas: Councilman Whitley, Timms and Roloff. Nays: Councilmen Porter, Wood and Muma. Absent: None.

Mr. Al Hodge of Daverman and Associates appeared before Council to discuss the options available to the City in regard to buying into an electric power facility. He briefly outlined proposals available from Consumer's Power Company and Detroit Edison and discussed the advantages and disadvantages of nuclear power and coal-fired facilities. Mr. Hodge also stated he would have all the figures in regard to the cost of such a purchase within two weeks.

The following Resolution was offered and moved for its adoption by Councilman Wood and supported by Councilman Timms.

Bands in festival

The Charlevoix High School Symphony and Concert Bands will travel to Traverse City Saturday to participate in the Michigan High School Band and Orchestra Association Festival according to their director, Gary Stutzman.

The Concert Band composed of ninth and tenth grade students will participate in Class D. The band will be playing at 8:25 a.m. at the Traverse City High School. Selections to be played by the band include Monterey March by King, Pageantry Overture, Edmundson, and Osterling's Overture in Classical Style.

The Symphony Band, whose membership is composed mainly of upper classmen, will performed at the Traverse City Junior High School at 3:40 p.m. This band will be playing Burst of Flame by Bowles, Chorale and Capp riccio, Giovannninni, and Holst Suite In E Flat, Holst.

Parents and friends of the band are encouraged to attend the festival and hear these and other bands play.

William Hall Chorale to perform May 1

The final concert of the Northern Michigan Concert Association will be held Tuesday, May 1, at 8:30 p.m. at the Petoskey Middle School auditorium.

Featured on the program will be the William Hall Chorale presenting a variety of choral music including folk songs, opera choruses, musical comedy and spirituals.

Although the chorale is a relatively new group, they have become known as an outstanding choral ensemble. While on tour in Europe, they were given resounding accolades from audiences across the continent. However, the group itself takes greatest pride in being only the second chorus in the last fifteen years to record Benjamin Britten's moving "War Requiem."

William Hall, director of the group, is well known both in this country and in Europe as a conductor. He holds a doctorate from the University of Southern California and is professor of music at Chapman College, Orange, California. He is also the Minister of Music at the "Cathedral of the West" in Glendale where his adult choir is heard every Sunday over radio station KIEV.

Although disappointed that the Tapiola Children's Choir of Finland is unable to keep its scheduled appearance, concert goers will be treated to an evening of rare entertainment by the William Hall Chorale.

Tickets for the new season's performances will go on sale the second week in May and music lovers are urged to plan now to participate in the next series of concerts coming to Northern Michigan.

County 4-H program in need of volunteers

Bob Bellairs is 4-H Program Assistant for the Charlevoix County Cooperative Extension Service. This week he tells the Courier about 4-H and his part in its operation.

COURIER: How long have you been with 4-H?

BELLAIRS: Three years. I came here from college.

COURIER: Where did you go to college?

BELLAIRS: Ferris State. I have a certificate in technical drafting and tool design and a bachelor of science degree in vocational education.

COURIER: What are the "4-H's"?

BELLAIRS: Head, heart, hands, and health. The official emblem is a green four-leaf clover with a white "H" on each clover leaf. The official 4-H motto is "To Make the Best Better."

COURIER: When were 4-H clubs started?

BELLAIRS: In 1914, when the concept of Cooperative Extension work at Land Grant colleges started.

COURIER: How many clubs are there in Charlevoix County?

BELLAIRS: About 25, with 250 to 300 club members.

COURIER: What ages are 4-H members?

BELLAIRS: The official age limits are nine to 19, although about 25 percent of our members are seven or eight years old. The younger ones are not eligible to go to outside activities like the 4-H Summer Camp. The older teens act in leadership capacities.

COURIER: Do you have more girl or boy members?

BELLAIRS: About two-third of our members are girls. Athletics complete for the time and interest in livestock and horses, but when they find athletics, they quit. We don't try to get into sports activities because we feel other agencies are better equipped to handle them.

COURIER: Is your overall membership increasing or decreasing?

BELLAIRS: Numberwise, we're holding steady. We do find, however, that the kids we do have are working on more projects.

COURIER: Do most of your members live in rural areas?

BELLAIRS: No, it's about half and half.

COURIER: What's the biggest part of your job?

BELLAIRS: Recruiting adult leaders for projects. Almost anybody can be a leader. The only requirement is that they have some knowledge of the project they are leading. There are also leadership training sessions. Leaders have great choice in their projects. For instance, in sewing, in their first year they don't have to make an apron or a pot holder. They do what they can handle and use their imagination.

COURIER: What is the most popular project these days?

BELLAIRS: Arts and crafts. Horses are next.

COURIER: How does a 4-H member decide what projects to undertake?

BELLAIRS: He can work on any project he's interested in, as long as he's learning something. In shows, he's awarded a ribbon on work he has done and how much he's learned. He's not in competition with others.

COURIER: Are most of your leaders women?

BELLAIRS: Yes. The men we have are in the livestock areas.

COURIER: Do the leaders operate the clubs as they see best?

BELLAIRS: Yes, we leave it pretty much up to them. Our office jurisdiction is age limits and county-wide shows.

COURIER: What are some of your activities other than club work?

BELLAIRS: We have a summer camp at the Oequeoc Outdoor Center in Presque Isle County. It's for 4-H members in Charlevoix, Emmet, Cheboygan and Presque Isle Counties and runs for a week. Members from nine to 13 are campers and those 14 and older act as counselors. The camp offers 10 different classes each year, classes in swimming, archery, conservation, arts and crafts, photo developing, fishing, and sailing. This year we have an aquatic study grant so we can study the lake. We're also going to have a class in clowning. We have 100 to 120 kids in camp each year.

COURIER: What do you have for older members?

BELLAIRS: Those 14 and over attend 4-H Exploration Days at MSU in June. They can choose the classes they want to attend. The classes are conducted by 4-H leaders and University instructors. Also, for older members, we have the 4-H Winter Camp in February. It's a weekend camp for members from the four-county area and is held at the Bethel Youth Camp in Presque Isle County.

COURIER: You just had your Spring Achievement Day. What other county-wide activities are there?

BELLAIRS: We have our Fall Fair at Whiting Park on Labor Day. That's when the members display more of their projects.

COURIER: Then there's the Emmet County Fair?

BELLAIRS: Yes, everyone who enters the Youth Division at the fair must be a 4-H member. Some of our Horse Club members also go to the Gaylord Fair each year.

COURIER: What else do club members do?

BELLAIRS: We're adding Community Service projects. Last year we helped mark farm machinery against theft. This summer, on July 10, we're going to have an animal show at Grandview. The patients will make ribbons for winners in each category. Some of our clubs participate in walkathons and bikeathons. We encourage them to do such things.

COURIER: What kind of help do you need?

BELLAIRS: We need volunteer leaders. There are no rigid requirements, only an interest in teaching children. They don't have to worry about the number of kids in the club. We'd be happy to have Mom teach her own two children. Anyone who's interested should call me at 582-6232.

COURIER: Do you have any 4-H club members of your own?

BELLAIRS: Not quite. Becky is four and David is one. My wife, Jennie, is Charlevoix County chairman of the LaLeche League.

COURIER: What are your hobbies?

BELLAIRS: Railroads, photography, bicycling, and woodworking.

Schurrer builds unique home of cement and stone

George Schurrer

Part 1

By KATHERINE AMY

Some men are many things in their lifetimes. George Schurrer has been one of the older boys in a family of 12 children, an engineering student, a soldier with a remarkable war record, a family musician, a cathedral artist, a foreign-speaking immigrant. He has made and lost two fortunes; one in Europe, one in America. As a decorator for Marshall Field he has met the famous and infamous.

I met him about 20 years ago in Charlevoix – a lovely little resort town that pleases me, not only with the beauty of its natural setting, but also with its citizens; so many of whom are artists and do-it-yourselfers. But even they found strange doing what Papa Schurrer was doing. What was he doing anyway, building a bomb shelter?

His summer home in Charlevoix is unique. It's his design and mostly his labor – hard labor, as anyone working in cement and stone knows. It looks solid and permanent – the only unfinished home I know that already looks 300 years old.

The walls are of stone set in cement. The roof is entirely of cement, cantilevered over the carport and kitchen door. There is also a cast cement garage. There are two cast fireplaces, one on the ground floor and one on the first floor. The first floor fireplace has been cast so that warmed smoke will heat the parlor. Conduits for electrical wiring have been cast into the walls. The construction is well-planned, and completely of poured cement and rocks.

The composition of the walls is based on the composition of a wall hundreds of years old that Schurrer first saw as a boy in Germany. A team of horses were trying to pull it down; not by the one team, nor even by two teams. It had to be burned.

The wall had been made of clay and cowdung, reinforced with saplings woven together and whitewashed over many years. The coating of whitewash, applied over perhaps 300 years, was about two inches thick.

Schurrer used stone in cement reinforced with wire mesh and reinforcing rods. He made a wooden fraime, level on a table four feet high. Then he put in the mesh and rods, and poured in the cement which he had mixed in a small cement mixer. While the cement was still wet, he set in selected rocks, most of which he split himself from heated boulders. The wall was allowed to cure in the frame on the table for two weeks while he drove to Chicago where he lived and worked as the chief engineer for a large Catholic high school.

The second weekend he would drive again to Charlevoix, winch the wall into an upright position with winching equipment of his own design, and lay out the next wall to cure. When I met him, 20 years ago, all the walls of his large three bedroom home were completed and in place, constructed entirely on weekends and two week summer vacations.

Some of the sections of poured cement ceiling were done by others while he was in Chicago. One of the sections had been placed wrongly and had hardened into position. Schurrer, a resourceful engineer and designer, remedied this situation by designing and constructing a poured cement cupola atop the roof to be used as a studio.

I hadn't as yet seen evidence of Schurrer's ability to paint portraits or landscapes or cathedral frescoes, but evidence of other types of artistry were everywhere to be seen in his cement home.

The cement beams in his parlor appear to be massive wooden beams. His cement walls appear to be paneling. One has to touch them to know they are not wood. I watched him wood grain the paneling in his front bedroom. Over two coats of paint – one a cement paint with an oil base and one a flat paint with an oil base – he had spread the wood-colored wine which was the vehicle for the graining he was then prepared to do. (He said vinegar would also work.)

He used a little paint brush that looked like a worn out one you might find in a child's water color kit, except that it had many bristles missing. He began at the top of the wall and simply moved his hand downward, wiggling it from time to time. The wiggle and the spacing of the separate lines gave the walls their separate character. In the parlor he had painted in walnut panelling; in the front bedroom, cherry and maple panelling; in the back central bedroom, knotty pine panelling. The knots in the panelling were made by putting his thumb on the wall and giving it a half turn. The walls were then completed with a final coat of varnish.

The effect of his artist's eye and decorator's touch can also be seen in his front porch. A compass measuring eight and a half feet in diameter is cast in the porch floor. Its red or white or blue cement sections measure twenty-four points of the compass. Each section was cast and colored in his Chicago basement workshop and assembled in Charlevoix.

Also cast in Chicago and assembled in Charlevoix is the set of interlocking cement steps curving from the porch of the first level to the ground level below. The steps were cast and colored to resemble marble as was the porch bench attached to the porch kitchen wall above. Along the outside curve of the porch was on one side of the steps is a wrought iron railing. I was surprised to learn that the railing had once been iron bookcases discarded by the Catholic high school where he worked.

His Chicago home also shows his artist's touch. In his "mud room" – a small room containing doors to the garage, basement, second bathroom, and dining room, is birch panelling. That such a room should contain such beautiful panelling surprised me until I touched it and realized it was painted plaster, not wood.

In the basement was another, startling, surprise. He unrolled it for me to see a nine foot canvas mounted on the for wall. It was a portrait of Christ so real and so compelling that He seemed to be alive in the room, looking at me. Wherever I moved, His challenging gaze seemed to follow me. Although the basement was dark, the portrait seemed bathed in light. George said he could produce this effect with special pigments. He mixes his own pigments, some of which he orders from Europe. This vivid portrait was one of two originally commissioned for Klockner Memorial Lutheran Church in Chicago. He has also painted circus wagons for Barnum and Bailey in California and gold leaf restoration for a Canadian church. In 1939 a picture ortiele about his art work was published in the Chicago Tribune.

Katherine Amy is a freelance writer who is a summer resident of Charlevoix.

Wallace to perform at Assembly of God Church

When was the first time you were invited to experience music artistry "like you've never heard before"?

Sounds a little pretentious, right?

Yet that's exactly the claim of a new Canadian company, Sonrise Productions, of London, Ontario, when it introduces Ken Wallace, an internationally-respected tenor musician, who will be appearing on April 29 at 7 p.m. at the Charlevoix Assembly of God Church.

Wallace's talents and communicative skills are presented in a variety of settings: from the use of sound-track equipment, to electronic keyboards, to some fast-paced multimedia capsules, effectively packaging the music to fascinate the most diverse audience.

decision to determine their course of action.

They reported that none of their group was fishing, at present Winstone and others said they did not want to risk imprisonment and possible confiscation of equipment, until they knew the court's decision of the status of the federal treaties.

Northern Michigan Ottawa Association represents some 5,000 non-reservation Ottawas and Chippewas, most of whom reside in the Lower Peninsula. Most of the commercial fishermen present at Saturday's meeting live between Petoskey and Traverse City.

Repeatedly the subject of commercial fishing by Indians from the Bay Mills Reservation and Sault Ste. Marie Band, in Little Traverse Bay, the area around Charlevoix and Grand Traverse Bay, came up.

"We didn't have all this trouble until four years ago when the guys started coming down here with their big boats," one fisherman said bitterly.

Others said that the two Upper Peninsula groups were issuing BIA Indian identification cards to people who were not even ¼ Indian.

Mrs. Oommie pointed out that the NMOA Commercial Fishing Regulations stipulate that people eligible to fish under treaty rights must be at least ¼ Indian as well as descendants from Indians listed on the Durant Roll, a census taken in 1910, prior to the signing of the 1836 treaty.

The group was anxious that they not be identified with the Upper Peninsula group, and adamant that they be recognized as legitimate Treaty Indians.

As non-reservation Indians the NMOA has had a long struggle gaining federal recognition. There are some 3,000 Indians living on Michigan Reservations, according to Mrs. Dominic, and 35,000 not living on reservations.

"We've had to fight every step of the way," she said.

The NMOA limits recognition to ¼ blood Indians who are descendants of the 1910 enrollees, Mrs. Dominic said.

Mrs. Dominic told the group that NMOA first gained recognition when the federal government settled their claims based on Treaties of 1836 and 1842.

"Next we were successful in gaining recognition to become eligible for Indian education funds.

"Now we are trying to get them (the Bureau of Indian Affairs) to agree to countersign our Indian fishing cards, which will protect us," she said.

The group agreed to establish a "defense fund" to help pursue test cases after Judge Fox's decision comes down.

The group elected Melvin Winstone as new chairman, George Anthony as vice chairman, and Isabel Kenwabikise of Beaver Island as secretary. A committee of "historians" was formed to compile news articles and other reports relevant to Indian fishing cases.

Mrs. Dominic reported that she had met with a special FBI agent in Traverse City on Friday. They had discussed the violence Indian fishermen had experienced in the past and the incident at Winstone's specifically.

The group agreed to attempt to meet with non-Indian sports-fishermen, in hopes of averting further violence.

Michigan voters recently approved the elimination of good time on the minimum sentences of a variety of crimes. The corrections department predicts a prison increase of from 2,000 to 4,000 as a result.

The tour of the prison and attendance at the community forum have provided, Judge Fershee with much information concerning prisons and the imprisoned. He indicated a willingness to share this information with the citizens of his district. If there are any groups interested in having the judge speak to them he can be contacted by calling the District Court office in Charlevoix or Petoskey.

FAITH REVEALS THE GOOD THINGS ABOUT OUR YOUTH

Our most unfairly maligned age group is the one consisting of older children and teenagers. Because of the spectacular, headline-making antics of a very small minority, our young people are routinely suspected of everything from noise, insolent behavior and drug addiction to school vandalism and a willingness to knock an elderly woman to the ground for the few dollars in her handbag. In truth, the vast majority of our youth are friendly, respectful, enthusiastic, law abiding, hardworking students; intent only on learning to make their way in the world and perhaps improving it in the process. If your training and influence have been reinforced by family attendance at the Church of your choice, then YOUR children undoubtedly belong to this praiseworthy majority.

The greatest reverence is due the young.
—Decimus Junius Juvenal (circa 50-130 A.D.)

'Even a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure, and whether it be right.'

Song-of-the Morning retreat adds university classes

By JAN NAGEL
Special to the Courier

A Sanskrit scholar, a nutritionist, a filmmaker, a yoga teacher, and two kinesiologists will provide an interesting cross-section of classes to those participating in a "Yoga University" program this summer at Song-of-the-Morning Yoga Retreat in Vanderbilt.

Song-of-the-Morning Ranch is a breath-taking expanse of 800 acres on the shores of the Pigeon River surrounded by The Pigeon River State Forest.

The retreat came into being through the philanthropy of J. Oliver Black, a retired auto executive and inventar from the Detroit area.

Black is also the oldest living disciple of Parmahansa Yogananda. Yogananda, a great Hindu master, came to America some 50 years ago to unite eastern and western philosophies through Self-Realization Fellowship.

Song-of-the-Morning Ranch is the result of Black's desire to carry on the teachings of Yogananda, who saw the timeless science of yoga as a way to live a full and practical life.

Until last year, the ranch functioned as a retreat for members and guests – a harmonious, natural setting for contemplation and meditation either in the cazy fieldstone lodge or one of the newly cunpleted geadesic domes.

Last summer, Black was able to bring to fruition another of Yogananda's wishes – an accredited university program of classes benefitting not only the mind but the body and saul as well.

Students enrolling in summer clusses can receive physical education credits by learning and practicing shoulder stands, hall-lotuses and other classical Hatha yoga positions with Oanald Handyside, Golden Lotus Association teacher.

Or they can pick up philosophy credits by examining Karma yoga as presented in The Bhagavad Gita under the direction af noted Sanskrit schular Dr. T. K. Venkateswaran.

Dr. Venkateswarun was a research schular at Horvard, and teaches in the religious studies department of The University af Detroit.

To learn more about health and harmony for the body, college credit will be given for the course in vegetarian nutrition taught by nutritionist and home economist Eileen Guilford.

Dr. Gary and Or. Oiane Saks af Gaylord will be presenting classes in the Physiology of Nutrition and also Applied Kinesecology, a workshop using acupressure and reflex inussage to reduce pain, tension, and imprave the posture.

Effective self-expression through writing and speaking will be the focus of the university level closs taught by Marilyn Beker Rorabaugh, a Canadian journalist, critic, filmmaker, and author who has received national and international awards for her work.

The summer program as a whole is designed to integrate the three facets af mon: mind, body, and soul. Classes can, however, be taken separately for college credit or for general knowledge. Students can either live at the ranch or commute.

Living at the ranch for the summer session (July 9 through August 31) could be an educational experience in itself.

Song-of-the-Morning is located on the banks of The Pigeon River Falls. The rushing water power an old wooden waterwheel as well as a modern turbine. They generate all the electricity used at the ranch.

As an inventar, designer, and a man of great vision and joy, Mr. Black has built geodesic domes and renovated old lodge buildings as well as produced functional furniture, lights, and cunping tents for the use of visitors.

Elk and deer are not infrequent visitors to the serene waods and private lake that add further uppeal to the ranch.

A garden is part of summer activities and as much as possible year-round staff members grow the faad they eat. When the exception of a turkey dinner an Sunday's the weekly menu consists of fruits, nuts, vegetables, and dairy products made into delicious, nutritious vegetarian fare.

On Sundoys throughout the year the ranch holds a yoga church service at 11 a.m. that the public is invited to attend to learn more about yoga as u science and a philosaphy.

Those interested in more information about the yoga university or the Sunday services can cull Song-of-the-Morning Ranch in Vanderbilt at (517) 983-4107.

EIGHT HUNDRED ACRES of woods ten miles east of Vanderbilt offer a natural and harmonious setting for the yoga retreat. (Jan Nagel Photo).

What separates Big Rock from other utilities? Fuel

BY SARA GAY DAMMANN
Special to the Courier

Big Rock Nuclear Puwer plant generates electricity for Consumers Puwer Company rn a manner similar to any utility – whether coal, gas or oil fired. The erucial difference at Big Rock is the fuel.

Because the fuel is radioactive – uranium – and because the process of fission is used to produce the heat to boil the water to produce steam to turn turbines to generate electrieity, the eyes of the nation are focused on plants like Big Rock.

Last Tuesday, State Senator Mitch Irwin and two reporters were given a tour of Big Rock, to educate them on the basics of nuclear power

Irwin had come to Charlevoix, not just because of the recent leak, he said, "but because I have been concerned about nuclear power fur a long time. The Three Mile Island accident accelerated my eoncerns and the leak greatly accelerated them."

Irwin and the reporters were given a general tour of the plant, preceeded by an introduction to nuclear fission by Ed McNamara, a training officer at the facility.

The group was initially greeted by Russell DeWitt, Consumers Manager for Nuclear Production, whu left a meeting with General Electric engineers where step by step Consumers and GE engineers were analyzing last week's leak and its causes.

Irwin's request to sit in on those discussions was denied by DeWitt.

During the tour Charles Axtell, Plant Health Physicist, McNamara, Jack Keans, Consumers Power Public Relations and Richard Dalbquist Consumers Area Manager, accompanied the group.

To enter Big Rock proper one must be thoroughly scrutinized, identified, searched and researched by Burns Security Guards.

"When we opened the plant in 1962 we had 42 full time enployees. Today we have 43 armed guards, alone," Dalbquist observed.

The guards, under contract to Consumers Power Company, are highly visible at all nuclear power plants, by Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) mandate. The NRC is the governmental agency with ultimate oversight responsibility for nuclear power plants.

The security is so tight at Big Rock that even a reporter's camera had to be unloadcd and opened, lenses cases opened and searched. Each individual passed through a metal detector, Each visitor was given a plastic pass card to be inserted into various boxes as the group moved from one section of the plant to the next.

The group was cautioned not to cross any yellow taped lines nor touch anything with yellow or yellow and magenta tape on it. All such marked areas or items were considered contaminated by radioactivity.

Each person was given safety glasses, hard hat and a personal dosimeter. A dosimeter measures radiation and is carried by everyone within the plant.

Senator Irwin and his party moved quickly into the containment sphere – the famous green dome of Big Rock.

It is within this containment sphere that the vital activitics take place.

To enter the containment sphere Axtell and McNamara used specially coded plastic cards with embedded magnetized numbers, to open a set of heavy jail-type doors and then a large round door which resembles a bank vault door. They were entering a personnel lock. Standing inside a short but large in diameter round room they watched the first door close as Axtell hand-turned a lever. Once the first door closed McNamara pressed buttons and operated a lever to open a door at the other side.

The group entered the containment sphere.

Standing high up in the green dome of the containment sphere one could just see the top of the opening into the reactor vessel which was within a yellow tapped area at the very center of the sphere.

Workers inside that area, near the opening to the reactor vessel and other vital parts of the reactor were clad in white jump suits, taped at their joints, gloves and hoods, but with their faces exposed.

Axtell said that despite the fact that there was radioactive contamination within this area it was easily washed off and each worker was carefully monitored to be sure he was clean from contamination when he left.

Earlier McNamara had given a basic explanation of what the group would see. McNamara admitted, then, that it was frustrating to have to over simplify such a complex process, but he had outlined the basics.

He explained that Big Rock is a boiling water reactor in contrast to Three Mile Island, a pressurized water reactor.

At Big Rock, at the very bottom of the containment sphere, sits the reactor vessel. It is some 9 feet in diameter, 30 feet tall, surrouned by walls of carbon steel, 5 ¼ inches thick and a second wall of 9 foot thick high density concrete.

Eighty-four bundles of nuelear fuel, uranium oxide, whieh is 3 percent enriched uranium (U 235) and mostly U 238 are used to ereate fission. The U 235 is the important element in fission.

For comparative purposes McNamara said that a nuclear explosion – a bomb – would require 99 percent U 235.

Fission he explained is the splitting uf the uranium atom and the release of neutrons which creates a chain reaction – more atoms splitting, more neutrons released to bombard another atom to split it and so on.

The turning process produces many elements, among them the dangerous Iodine 136 and Strontium 90, plus from 1 to 12 extra neutrons, he said. Those extra neutrons are the key to fission.

Writing Einstein's famous formula on the blackboard, E mc² McNamara continued, "The mass (m) lost in fission is what ereates energy (E). The e stands for the speed of light (186,000 miles per second).

The release of energy in fission is terrific, as one can imagine just contemplating the square of the speed of light. That energy is released in the form of heat (600-650 degrees F.). To control the fission process, and the heat, this all takes place within water. In addition, boron blades move between the fuel bundles to control the rate of fission.

The water in the reactor vessel, where the fission takes place, heats up and turns to steam (585 F) and rises through pipes to a steam drum where it is dried and used to turn turbines to generate electricity. The steam drum, itself, is surrounded by a four foot thick wall.

This radioactive steam is condensed, recycled and run back through the reactor vessel. The process of fission heating the water repeats.

Water from Lake Michigan is used to cool the steam so it can be recycled. This lake water and the radioactive water are never mixed, under normal conditions. Each is contained within their own set of pipes. The lake water temperature, however, does rise as much as 18 degrees F. before it is returned to the lake.

The leak which aroused attention Friday, April 20, apparently occurred at a control rod drive, near where the recycling radioactive water was returning to the reactor vessel.

Last Tuesday's visitors did not actually see any of the afore described parts of the plant, all of which are shielded by thick concrete walls.

But standing on the reactor deck, looking down towards the reactor vessel, one could see the areas in which this volatile process takes place.

A few yards off center in the containment sphere, sits a square, water-filled pool. Peering down into the pool, fuel bundles, old fuel rods and other contaminated equipment could be seen.

Big Rock uses 84 fuel bundles at a time. They must be replaced every three years, and are done so on an annual rotating basis.

The spent fuel, still radioactive, but

Voters approve addition

Construction at Charlevoix High School could get started by fall after voters approved a $700,000 bond issue Monday night to finance a building addition.

Voters OK'd the bond issue 586-550. There were five spoiled ballots.

The building addition will enclose the outdoor area between the two buildings at the high school site. It is expected to add nearly 13,000 square feet to the crowded facility.

The addition, school officials say, will rebeve overcrowding in the library, cafeteria and science areas; take students out of the three portables; conserve energy; and keep the high school accredited by North Central.

School officials say the building addition will be paid off in 11 years.

Interest on an 11 year bond at $700,000 is expected to be about $300,000.

If construction bids total less than $700,000, school officials say, only the millage needed to meet the retirement obligations of the bond will be levied.

The millage required to pay for the bond is expected to be ²₄ of a mill. Officials say the cost to most homeowners will be $10-$20 per year.

The board still has to approve final design of the additiun and request and accept construction bids before an addition is started. One school board member told the Courier it is hoped construction can start in the fall.

The $700,000 bond issue was recommended to the board by a task-forcе. Tom LaBlance, chairman of the task force, said the proposal was "baste" and "economical."

The task force was formed after voters rejected two proposals in September. One proposal asked for $2.315 million for classroom additions and renovations while the second proposal asked for $885,000 for an addtion to the physical education building.

Prosecutors

Violence over fishing condemned

What do nine prosecuting attorneys from northern Michigan have to say about the current gill net controversary?

Plenty.

Prosecuting attorneys from Alpena, Antrim, Charlevoix, Cheboygan, Benzie, Leelanau, Grand Traverse, Presque Isle and Emmet counties met with DNR officials Friday to coordinate enforcement of the state conservation laws.

The prosecutors supported the interim policy of the DNR concerning Indians fishing under federally recognized fishing licenses while Indian fishing rights are determined in federal district court.

The interim policy is with the Bay Mills and Sault Ste. Marie Tribe of Chippewa Indians. It tells DNR officers to "enforce tribal regulations promulgated by the respective tribal authorities." One provision agreed upon by the DNR and the tribal authorities is that no gill netting will occur south of Good Hart until May 15. Any violation of that agreement will be reported by the DNR to tribal authorities.

It also tells DNR officers to "not issue citations or seize any fish, gear, boats or equipment" to Indians with a 1979 Tribal Fishing Identification Card issued by either the Bay Mills or Sault Ste. Marie Tribe of Chippewa Indians and countersigned by an authorized official of the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA).

The prosecutors agreed that all other persons fishing with gill nets "will be prosecuted as vigorously as the law will allow."

According to the prosecutors, this will provide a uniform and united stand against fishing violators in northern Michigan.

The prosecutors also condemned violence.

"Although vitally concerned about the depletion of the natural resources, we eannot condone any acts of violence and will fully prosecute any violation of the criminal laws," the prosecutors said in a release. "Citizens may notify local law enforcement agencies of any

Seven nemhers of the Detroit Lions football team testéd their skills in basketball Friday night against faculty members in the Charlevoix School System. No official score was kept as the contest was more for fun than anything else. At halftime, the Lions signed autographs (Luther Blue shown here). Proceeds from the game will be used to help pay for the Charlevoix Marching Band's trip to Holland for the Tulip Festival. See page 6 for more photos.

Consumers

No danger caused by leak

A Consumers Power official says "there is absolutely no danger to anyone living or working near the Big Rock Point Nuclear Plant as a result of the small seepage of low-level radioactive water into the plant's containment building."

Company Vice-President C.H. Bilby explained that no radiation was released to the environment when about two quarts of radioactive water seeped from the reactor vessel into the containment building nearly two weeks ago. Bilby said all of the water has been recovered and that "none left the containment building." He added that no employees at the plant suffered unusual exposure to radiation.

Bilby also said the water was not "highly radioactive."

"Actually, the water contained only very low levels of radioactivity. In fact, if a person were to drink the entire two quarts, he would receive only about the same amount of exposure he usually receives from natural background sources during the year."

The reactor at the Big Rock Plant has been shut down since Feb. 4 for a routine refueling operation, Bilby said. The small seepage of water into the containment building was discovered while the company was performing routine tests in anticipation of start-up.

Bilby said that because of the seepage, the reactor was not started up. Consumers Power Company and officials of General Electric, builder of the reactor, are studying the problem to determine what repairs are needed. The reactor will remain in cold sutdown until any necessary repairs are made.

When money is scarce or tight, as conditions this year appear to be, a lender may charge discount "points" to make a loan. A point is a one time charge equal to one percent of the loan. Charging points is a method that the lender uses to make up the difference between the legal ceiling on interest rates, where such ceilings exists, and the yield that can be obtained elsewhere on the market. Thus, the cost of financing a home may be higher because of a discount points. The length of time one takes to repay a loan may also have a bearing on the amount of interest to be paid.

Technical terms will never be a problem for you whether they involve financing or another aspect of real estate when you work with THOMAS REAL ESTATE, 100 Pine River Lane, 547-4494. Spring clean-up time!

It's spring clean-up time in Charlevoix!

Starting Monday, city trucks will begin picking up rubbish alongside Charlevoix streets. The clean-up will continue through Friday.

City residents wishing to have their trash collected by the city must have it at the curb in front of their home on the same day of the week as their regular garbage pick-up.

City residents are asked to place all rubbish in back of the curb. For streets without curbs, rubbish should be placed off the traveled portion of the road.

Large objects and brush and tree limbs do not have to be placed in containers. They should, however, be placed for easy loading. No regular garbage will be collected. Residents wanting containers returned should mark "SAVE" on them.

After Friday it will be illegal to place rubbish alongside city streets.

Isn't This...

Nuclear protesters release balloons

Anti-nuclear power protesters gathered at Elzinga Park Sunday afternoon and released dozens of helium filled balloons into the air.

Attached to each balloon was a card stating that the balloon was released from Big Rock Point and that if it were a radioactive isotope it would pose a health problem to "you, your pet and your livestock."

"We want to call the public's attention to the risk of nuclear power," said Larry Shalda, a member of Northern Michigan Alternatives Development (NoMAD). "By this act, we hope to generate some serious, intellectual public discussion on nuclear power."

The rally was sponsored by NoMAD and the Energy Resource Group (ERG).

About 40 people showed up to peacefully protest nuclear power. The balloons were released at about 1 p.m. Winds drifted the balloons northeast.

Organizers of the rally are hoping that people who find the balloons will return the attached addressed card and indicate the location of where the balloon was found.

According to Shalda, "this is not a one shot deal" and that more protests will follow. Shalda said the protesters would "love" to see Big Rock shutdown permanently.

The nuclear plant is currently shutdown after a seepage of low-level radioactive water was discovered nearly two weeks ago. Consumers Power, who owns the plant, said the seepage did not endanger "anyone living or working near" the plant. It is not known when the plant will re-open.

"We're not here just because of that leak," Shalda said. "We're here because nuclear power is unsafe and it is dangerous to the atmosphere, the earth and the people."

Fourteen members of NoMAD were arrested in December by the Charlevoix County Sheriff's Department for trespassing on Consumers Power property.

The case is now in the 90th District Court in Charlevoix.

Defense attorney James Olson has asked that the safety of nuclear power - particularly at Big Rock - be argued before a jury.

The "Big Rock 14" have pleaded innocent to the trespassing charges. Olson contends that his clients had the right to protest on Consumers Power property because of the imminent danger of nuclear power plants and because the protest was peaceful.

"I feel the argument is compelling for the question of our necessity defense to go to a jury and not just be decided by a judge," Olson said. "This case will affect a large number of people, not just the defendants."

Charlevoix County Prosecuter Scott Beatty has argued that the court case be limited to the trespassing charge.

Although he believes the issue of nuclear safety is of vital concern and should be talked about, Beatty says the 90th District Court is not the proper place to do it.

Beatty says the case has already taken up a lot of time in the prosecuter's office and, he says, if District Court Judge David Fershee allows Olson's argument - and nuclear safety is discussed in court - it will place an added burden on his office.

Beatty says the "defense of necessity" does not apply because the act of trespassing by the defendants couldn't prevent the nuclear operation from continuing and that the defendants had other options available in expressing their discontent with nuclear power.

Both Olson and Beatty have filed their initial briefs. Each will file one more brief before Fershee makes his ruling. It is now expected that Fershee will make his decision in May.

If, in any event, the defendants are found guilty of trespassing they could be handed sentences of 90 days in jail, a $100 fine, or both.

Nursery school visits hospital

Charlevoix Area Hospital nurses and other personnel frequently take time to show interested groups through the hospital. Last week children from the Charlevoix Cooperative Nursery School walked through the hospital, viewing rooms, Xray equipment, the emergency room, and other parts of the hospital, to acquaint them with the hospital.

"We encourage groups like this to visit the hospital, to acquaint them with the hospital. It helps them should they ever have to be hopitalized or visit the emergency room," Nursing Service Director Kathy Boss observed.

"The first thing you hear from a lot of little folks when they visit the emergency room as patients is 'I've been here before.'" Mrs. Boss laughed.

Groups who wish to have tours of Charlevoix Area Hospital may contact Mrs. Boss at the hospital.

Steve Mielke wins state award

While competing in the 17th annual Michigan Industrial Education Awards program at Traverse City over the weekend, several Charlevoix students won statewide recognition for excellence in the industrial arts field.

Placing first in the state in the 11th and 12th grade category for architectural drawing was Steve Mielke. Mielke did work drawings on a home he designed as part of his drafting assignments at Charlevoix High School. Mielke's drawings were judged best in the state by a team of judges composed of architects, engineers, draftsmen and drafting instructors. Mielke plans to pursue a career in architecture at the University of Michigan. He received a walnut and bronze plaque for his entry.

Also receiving state ribbons were: Gerard Wimmer,a freshman who took fifth place with a copper tooled picture of a bear; Tom Wilhelm, a senior who took seventh place in machine shop with a meat tenderizer; Kevin Purvis, a sophomore who took eighth place with a copper tooled picture of an old west scene; and Scott Golovich, a sophomore who took tenth place in woodworking with a cherry stool.

In addition, several other students won Certificates of Merit for their entries, those that did not qualify for a ribbon awarded to the ten best entries in the various classifications. The students were: Beth Camilleri (senior), architectural drawing; Richard McLenon (freshman), mechanical drawing; Bob Geer (junior), mechanical drawing; Mike Shupert, senior, electronic drawing; and Sam Kane (sophomore), copper tooling.

"We nt Charlevoix High School are extremely proud of these students and the many others who won regional awards the previous week," said Jim Jinsky, the industrial arts instructor.

The awards program was held at Skate World in Traverse City and was sponsored by The Detroit News and the Michigan Industrial Education Society.

Time to declare moratorium

The recent leakage of radioactive water coolant at the Big Rock nuclear power plant in Charlevoix appears to be a relatively minor incident. The leak in the coolant system measured less than a quart and was immediately detected and rectified.

I was thoroughly briefed during an onsite inspection of the Big Rock plant after the accident and I'm confident that workers at the plant and area residents face no immediate health hazards resulting from the accident.

However, the mere fact that the leakage occurred underscores the need to improve our emergency preparedness procedures for such incidents.

I recently met with the Governor to discuss this problem and outlined three recommendations for improving these procedures.

1. We must formalize plans requiring nuclear power plants to notify state and local officials immediately when any such accident occurs. Under current law, plant operators are only required to notify the Nuclear Regulatory Commission Region 3 in Chicago of any accidents. The time delay involved in relaying this information tu local officials and area residents could be disastrous.

2. The Nuelear Regulatory Commission should conduct a complete investigation of the Big Rock plant before the reactor begins future operations.

3. The Governor, U.S. Senator Riegle, U.S. Sen. Levin and the Michigan Congressional delegation must work together to convince the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to assign a full time inspector at the Big Rock site. The Charlevoix plant is the only nuclear reactor in the state that does not have a full time inspector on site to insure the safety of the plant at all times.

Additionally, I believe that we must declare a moratorium on the future construction of nuclear reactors in this state until we have a safe method of disposing the nuclear waste generated by these plants and reasonable assurances that any proposed plants are economically and environmentally sound.

I feel that this precautionary measure is necessary to insure the safety of all Michigan residents. I certainly do not want to start a panic with my proposals, however, I would rather be safe than sorry.

The potential danger inherent 'in nuclear energy plants makes it imperative that we increase our efforts to develop alternative energy sources. Solar wind, and geothermal energy are just a few of the possible solutions to our energy problems.

However, until these energy sources are fully developed, we must proceed with extreme caution when dealing with nuclear energy. We owe it to ourselves, our children and the generations that follow to keep our land safe from nuclear contamination.

Beefless Wednesday

Almost everyone in my family got a kick out of a story which appeared in the public prints recently about a proposed "Beefless Wednesday."

Ann Brown, a consumer advocate in Washington has come up with a scheme to force down the price of beef by having everyone in the country refuse to eat beef one day a week. She suggests Wednesday and the new holiday would be called "Beefless Wednesday."

You will notice that the proposed boycott covers only beef, On "Beefless Wednesdays" you would be perfectly free to indulge in thick slices of ham, racks of lamb, chicken Kiev or lobster thermidor, just so long as you stayed away from hamburger, steak and prime ribs.

When the newspaper carrying the "Beefless Wednesday" story arrived I left it open on the dining room table, wondering who in my family would be the first to comment. It was Katie.

"Hey, look at this," she said. "Some woman in Washington wants us to eat beef on Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday."

"What's wrong with Wednesday?" I asked.

"What's the whole idea," Katie answered. "You give up beef on Wednesdays and force prices down 5 percent. Should I run over to Edwards to buy a couple of pounds of hamburger? It's only Tuesday."

She knew perfectly well that Tuesday is Spaghetti-With-Meatless-Tomato-Sauce-Day at the Clocks.

Jennifer saw the "Beefless Wednesday" headline a few minutes later.

"Does that mean that I can't have meatloaf on my birthday?" she asked with tears in her voice.

"What day is your birthday?" I asked.

"It's on a Wednesday," she said, beginning to choke up.

"Which Wednesday? I thought you were born in the fall?"

"I was. Oct. 31. It's a Wednesday this year. And I want meatloaf for dinner," she insisted.

"Is there beef in meatloaf?" I asked.

"There's supposed to be," Jennifer answered. "But the last one you made tasted a lot like oatmeal and soybeans."

"Cheer up," I said. "By October, Jimmy Carter will have brought inflation under control and all of the farmers will be living in Monaco."

Allison didn't see the story until the following morning at breakfast.

"Does this mean we'll have to have beef six days a week?" she asked.

"That's what it sounds like," I said.

"What about Egg-Thursday?" she asked. "Or macaroni-and-cheese-Monday? Won't we be able to celebrate them anymore?"

"I'm afraid not," I said. "Not if we have to buy beef six days a week."

"What about fish on Friday." Jennifer asked. "Doesn't everybody eat fish on Friday?"

"They used to," I answered. "But if the beef boycott starts to move, a lot of people probably will eat fish on Wednesdays."

"What about baked beans on Saturday?" Katie asked. "And soup on Sunday. They were sort of becoming traditional."

"I'm sorry, kids," I said, "but if Ann Brown wants us to celebrate "Beefless Wednesday", we will just have to start eating beef again so we'll have something to give up. That's the way it goes when you get involved in high-powered political economics."

Danny was the only one of my kids who didn't have too much to say about "Beefless Wednesday." He doesn't remember what beef tastes like.

Allison didn't see the story until the following morning at breakfast.

"Does this mean we'll have to have

Do-it-yourself boom

I read something pretty frightening the other day. A story in a magazine said the cost of building had become so exorbitant that we would soon enter into a do-it-yourself boom. It made my flesh crawl.

I didn't raise sons to send them off to another do-it-yourself boom. Why does it have to be this way? Are we never to have a period in history where there is no wounding or maiming? No blood or no pain?

I remember when their father served in the do-it-yourself boom of 1949. How my eyes glistened with pride when I saw him in his coveralls. How courageous he looked standing there with his new tool box under his arm... ready to defend our home against warps, drafts, peeling paint, leaks and deterioration. If I knew then what I know now, I would never have let him enlist.

Do-it-yourseifers are naive. They believe the pamphlets that start off, "You can install a new ceiling for pennies" or the pictorial teaser that shows a man digging a hole in his yard at 10 a.m. and 15 people splashing in a 35-foot pool when the sun is setting.

The basic training of most men in home chores is a simple exercise called hanging a picture. Many men consider this a sexual violation of a wall. They do not want to make a mistake. They measure the width 15 times, depth eight times, make a small mark with a pencil, recheck the measurements one more time, put the wrong bit on the drill and diseover within two minutes that they have missed the stud by three inches. The memory of that hole in the wall haunts them the rest of their lives.

From there on in, it's just one confrontation after another. I watched my husband go through the Dragging Door Campaign where a door had to be shaved when we got a shag carpet, the Battle of Running Toilet where the float he had been bending broke off in his hand, and The Contact Lens Down the Shower Drain Skirmish, not to mention the Grape Wallpaper in the Kitchen Encounter where there was a talk of a trial separation until he could figure out that grapes grew down.

I saw a young couple the other day examining a tile kit for the bathroom. He didn't know yet about the long hours, trips to the emergency room for treatment, the costliness of a mistake. I whispered in his ear, "A do-it-yourself boom only seem glamorous. Trust me, wait until you're drafted!"

Election means it is time for the U.S. to change policy on Rhodesia

WASHINGTON – If the success of the Rhodesian elections doesn't clear the heads of some policy-makers in this town, what will? Some 64 percent of the electorate turned out. A black majority government will take over. Election observers from other countries were very impressed, and much of the Free World is giving Rhodesia a salute.

It was a struggle for Rhodesia to hold the elections at all. For many weeks, terrorists attacked villages in order to frighten people away from voting. On election days, terrorists from the Patriotic Front opened fire several times on voters at polling stations. Altogether, nine civilians were killed, according to reports, by land mines and rifles belonging to the terrorists.

Altogether, since the country was mobilized to prepare for the elections, 236 terrorists were killed, along with 21 members of Rhodesian security forces and civilians.

The U.S. and British governments, officially cool toward this democratic enterprise by Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith, must now revise their thinking. If a Conservative government headed by Margaret Thatcher takes power, there will be a new, positive British-Rhodesia. There is strong sentiment in both parties to lift the sanctions we have long imposed on Rhodesia.

Indeed, President Carter's hand might be forced by the Case-Javits bill's (now law) call for an end to such sanctions providing Rhodesia "demonstrates its willingness to negotiate in good faith" with all parties (including guerrillas) and also conducts "free elections observed by impartial, internationally recognized observers."

There were at least six such election inspection teams in Rhodesia, the most credible being that from Freedom House, the New York based organization which keeps watch on the state of political freedom and civil liberties in the world.

There were two American blacks on the Freedom House team – Prof. Maurice Woodward of Howard University, and Bayard Rustin, a longtime civil rights leader. Rustin vowed that if the vote turnout was big, "I would work with a number of major organizations to try and get American policy reversed. I will certainly go to the President and Congress and present my report and do what lobbying I can do to bring about a change in policy."

Rustin, while noting the new Rhodesian constitution is not ideal, said "neither was the American constitution" when established (it excluded blacks, women and the poor from voting), and "did not contain a Bill of Rights."

Allard Lowenstein, who has worked the liberal-Democratic side of the American politicol street for many years as a reformer, and even dissident, was also a member of the Freedom House team. He remarked, "I don't think that anybody who's been here can doubt that a very large number of Africans wanted to be part of this process."

Rhodesian blacks had the most to fear and the most to gain from the elections. Besides the threat from immediate assault by terrorists, there was also the vow of guerrilla leaders Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe, to one day punish those supporting the elections.

Last November, Mugabe's headquarters issued, in his name, a list of 50 black Rhodesian leaders who would be executed if they did not resign their positions in the Rhodesian government. They were called "opportunistic running-dogs."

What Rhodesian blacks gain is a black-dominated government (whites keep 28 percent of the parliamentary seats), a black prime minister, a chance for a middle-way between totalitarianism of the kind the African Marxist-Leninist regimes practice and the old colonial system. By any measure, black Rhodesians will be far better off living under a government and in a society which is majority black, but with an important white influence.

The Patriotic Front terrorists offer no elections, only the Communist line, and totalitarianism. Mozambique and Zambia, the nations which host these killers, get the poorest marks from Freedom House for political rights and civil liberties. Rhodesia, no hotbed of democracy, is regarded on the upswing, however, by Freedom House. This election should improve their rating considerably.

If President Carter sticks with the foolish, narrow approach to Africa which U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young espouses, then U.S. Policy is moribund indeed. Young is charmed by slick characters like Nkomo and Mugabe, just as CBS's Dan Rather was on Sixty Minutes' last week. Both should go out and see photos or the bodies of all the men, women and children these charming butchers have killed over the years.

The vast majority of these bodies are black, just as were the vast majority of those people who voted in last week's Rhodesian elections.

Tax assessment resolution

A Republicun sponsored resolution requesting the State Tax Commission to limit this year's property tax assessments to no more than 7.7 percent was introduced in the House last week. The resolution, sponsored by my Republican colleague, Rep. Carl Gnodtke of Sawyer, would pressure the State Tax Commission not to tax individual property owners in 1979 at a level more than 7.7 percent over last year's levels. The 7.7 percent figure is the inflation rate computed by the equation set up in last year's tax limitation referendum approved by voters.

In approving the Headlee Amendment, as it was called, voters told the Legislature that they do not want the state to spend their tax money at a greater rate than the inflation rate. In other words, they want the same proportion of their tax dollars to be spent by the state every year.

A weakness in the Headlee Amendment, however, is that it does not protect against individual property tax increases. In fact, the rollback provision of the amendment is inherently unfair in that it affects local taxing units and not individual properties.

As I'm sure you are aware, individual properties, especially in the residential and agricultural classes, have been assessed at a much higher rate than 7.7 percent this year. As a matter of fact, many properties around the state have had their assessments increased by nearly 80 percent over last year.

However, the proposed Headlee rollback would pertain to the average of all classes of property within the individual taxing unit, which is far less than the increase in the value of agricultural land in many areas of the state.

The value of new construction and property improvements would be excluded under the proposed limited increase. I'd also like to point out, though, that new construction and property improvements are also excluded under the Headlee Amendment.

Though a resolution does not have the force of law, it does provide a starting point for the Legislature to get behind a plan to limit individual assessments in Michigan to the rate of inflation. I believe this resolution is a good approach to begin solving this very serious problem that affects a large percentage of our state's property owners.

After all, the State Tax Commission does not have to answer to the voters, but the local officials and the legislators do. If the Legislature does adopt this resolution, I am confident that enough pressure could be put on the State Tax Commission so that a 7.7 percent ceiling could be accomplished.

Nuclear notification bill

As you are no doubt aware, last week the nuclear reactor at Big Rock Point near Charlevoix developed a leak which released approximately two quarts of radioactive water from the reactor vessel.

The handling of this incident by the owners and operators of the plant emphasizes, I believe, the need for legislation recently introduced in the House of Representatives by my Republican colleague, Rep. Robert Law of Livonia.

At the Big Rock incident, the company didn't inform the federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission until 24 hours after the event occurred, and never did directly inform state officials. Local authorities, such as the Charlevoix County Sheriff, complained that they were not informed of the incident by the plant operators and had to rely on reports in the news media for information.

Though the leakage of a relatively small amount of radioactive water was not serious, the notification procedure used by the plant operators was clearly unacceptable.

Under the bill introduced earlier this month, the company operating a nuclear power plant would be required to notify residents living within a 20-mile radius of the plant of any nuclear incident within two hours of the occurrence. Failure to notify the public and state police of the incident within the two-hour period could result in a four-year jail term for those company officials responsible, as well as a $2,000 fine.

Though the state government has no authority to regulate the operation of nuclear power plants (only the federal government has that power), it does have the right and the responsibility to protect citizens living nearby nuclear power plants.

In addition to requiring timely notification of nuclear incidents, the proposed legislation defines a nuclear incident by type, so reporting requirements will be absolutely clear.

The Big Rock incident in our own state, coupled with last month's accident at Three Mile Island, Pennsylvania, demonstrates the need for power companies to promptly notify state officials of potentially unsafe occurrences at nuclear power plants.

Irwin opposes wetlands legislation

State Sen. Mitch Irwin (D-Sault Ste. Marie) today expressed his opposition to Senate Bill 3, the wetlands legislation now pending before the Michigan Senate.

Senate Bill 3 is a measure which would provide for the preservation, management, protection and use of wetlands.

"This bill is an attempt by some urban legislators, who have abused their land, to force this restrictive law on those areas of the state who have not. I believe protection of certain critical wetlands is needed, but this bill is not the right way to accomplish this goal," Irwin said.

Among Irwin's major areas of disagreement with SB 3 are:

A) There is too much unchecked power delegated to DNR, which does not allow local government sufficient input into the process;

B) There is not a clear, concise definition of the many varieties of wetlands in existence;

C) There is no provision which mandates that an inventory be done in order to determine where wetlands are located; and

D) There is no compensation to a property owner whose use of his land may be restricted because a permit was denied.

"The downstate legislators must take into consideration the important and special concerns of the people living in a rural environment in Michigan," Irwin said. "This bill will continue to be unworkable, ambiguous, and unfair until amendments are adopted which would require an inventory, clearly define wetlands, insure local input, and provide some type of compensation."

"I will continue to oppose Senate Bill 3 unless and until the concerns of the people of Northern Michigan are satisfied," Irwin said. "The people of my district deserve, and should demand, nothing less."

Now is the time to check dogs for heartworms

WHAT ARE HEARTWORMS? They are large white worms (parasites) that can live in the heart of any dog.

HOW DO THEY AFFECT THE DOG? Heartworms cause congestive heart failure in both young and old dogs. Occasionally the dog will die suddenly; but more commonly he will suffer a prolonged illness characterized by coughing, listlessness and eventually death.

HOW DO DOGS PICK UP HEARTWORMS? Mosquitoes carry the infective larval stage of the worms from one dog to another. The bite of the mosquito infects the dog. This larvae eventually matures into adults and locate in the heart and major blood vessels.

IS THERE A CURE? Treatment may be successful if caught early. However, in advanced cases the patient may be unable to withstand the treatment.

HOW DO YOU DIAGNOSE IT? A blood test will pick up most cases. This test can be done anytime, but is best done in March or April.

HOW DO YOU PREVENT INFESTATION? Prevent your dog from getting bit by mosquitoes. Since it is usually impossible to do this, to be safe it is necessary to medicate your dog during the mosquito season with a preventative liquid or tablet. This preventative kills the developing larvae. It should begin May 1.

DOES THIS MEDICATION INJURE THE DOG IN ANY WAY? No, the preventative medication is safe unless the dog has already become infected with heartworms. For this reason it is necessary to test the dog each year before he is started on a preventative program.

DO WE HAVE TO BE CONCERNED ABOUT HEARTWORM DISEASE IN NORTHERN MICHIGAN? Yes, we already have had a significant number of positive cases in this area. It is strongly recommended your dog be tested.

Walter Hastings to participate in the Saginaw-Bay City Marathon

Pastor Walter Hastings of the Community Church of God combines his ministerial work with physical fitness. This week he tells the Courier about his jogging program.

COURIER: Tell us about the marathon you are about to run in.

HASTINGS: It's the Saginaw-Bay City Marathon at Delta College on May 5. They expect 250 runners over the 26 mile 385 yard course. I hope to run it in three and a half hours.

COURIER: Is this your first marathon?

HASTINGS: It's my first long race. I decided on Jan. 1 to run in it and I've been training seriously for four months.

COURIER: How long have you been running?

HASTINGS: I started in fifth grade and ran all through high school and college. I set the school record in the mile at Anderson College. Last July I ran in the 4.4 mile race at the Venetion Festival and others last fall and two this spring. The last one was 12.4 miles at Kalamazoo. I came in second in my age group and received a medal. My Sunday School class helped raise the money for me to go down there.

COURIER: How old are you?

HASTINGS: Thirty-five.

COURIER: What kind of a training schedule do you have?

HASTINGS: I try to run 60 miles a week. I keep a log book showing the number of miles each week, my weight, and my heart beat. Maybe I'll run 75 miles this week.

COURIER: Do you have a regular course that you run?

Meet Charlevoix

Walter Hastings

HASTINGS: No, I run to and from different places. I've run from Ellsworth, Boyne City,Ironton, Petoskey at different times. My favorite run is Barnard Road to Ferry Road to Black Road to Ellsworth.

COURIER: What's the hardest thing about running?

HASTINGS: Having dogs chase you.

COURIER: Do you always run alone?

HASTINGS: No, sometimes I run with Marvin Hooth. He's run in two marathons.

COURIER: Do you have training exercises other than running?

HASTINGS: Yes, I have a regular program of exercises, including calisthenics and stretching. I have a whole stack of books on running and read the Runner's World regularly.

COURIER: Did you run all winter?

HASTINGS: Yes, I had special shoes and didn't fall once.

COURIER: Not many high school and college track men keep on running after they graduate. How does it happen you did?

HASTINGS: I was a physical education major in college and worked for the YMCA for eight years before entering the ministry, so I've always been interested in physical fitness. I received eight college letters in track and cross country.

COURIER: What does your congregation think about your running?

HASTINGS: Their good cooking is partly responsible. I weighed 185 pounds when I came here and immediately shot up. Now I weigh 145 pounds and they're starting to rib me saying I'm getting to thin and that I'm skinny.

COURIER: Do the other members of your family run?

HASTINGS: Charles, who is 14, wants to run and Mike, who is 12, needs to. They and my wife, Lucy, often ride their bikes with me when I'm running.

CHIP to sponsor workshops on stress and planning a lifestyle

Two workshops, one on Stress, and one on Planning Your Own Lifestyle, are scheduled this month by Charlevoix's CHIP Counseling Center.

The Stress Workshop will be conducted in two evening sessions, by counselors Dren Schroeder and Terry Smith, Wednesday, May 16 and Wednesday, May 23rd, from 7 to 10 p.m. The location of these sessions can be learned by calling the CHIP Center 547-6551.

The workshops on Planning Your Own Lifestyle will be held in three sessions – Thursday, May 10, 17 and 24, from 7 to 10 p.m. at the Charlevoix Public Library. The fee for these three sessions is $25 per person.

Oren Schroeder explained the purpose and content of the two workshops, which are part of CHIP's continuing program of preventive mental health. The workshops are open to anyone interested. The fee for the Stress Workshop is $15 per person.

"People in this day and age are being bombarded with many kinds of situations that are stressful," Schroeder said discussing the Stress Workshop. "Few persons have the skills to know how to cope with those kinds of stress and so stress frequently tears a person down.

"This workshop is designed so that people will acquire skills to become better managers of their own lives," Schroeder, CHIP Center Director continued.

"Stress can be negative or positive. Some negative types of stress can be seen on the job – a bad relationship with a supervisor or boss – or in daily life when frantic activities put too many demands on your time," he explained.

During the workshop on stress, Schroeder said questionnaires will be used by individuals to understand the stresses in their own lives. Participants will have exercises in role playing, they will hear short lectures on the subject of stress and they will learn relaxation exercises to help cope with stress.

Schroeder said each participant will learn their own levels of stress, and look at patterns of responses to stress.

"The term stress has been used so widely it may also be useful to mention what stress is not," he said.

"Stress is not just nervous tension: stress is not something that causes alarm reaction, stress is the reaction: stress is not necessarily bad; and stress is not avoidable except by death," he stated.

"So the question is not how to avoid stress, but how to handle it," Schroeder said.

The workshop entitled "Planning Your Own Lifestyle" to be held on three consecutive Thursday evenings, will help participants assess their life goals and where they are heading.

"Life styles are always changing," Schroeder observed. "We do not just stay in one place living one way. Your lifestyle is not something you set in motion and then carry on."

However, Schroeder said, goal setting and planning for where we'd like to be in five years is how to achieve control of ones life.

"A lot of times we move into a lifestyle without being fully aware of what we are doing. Then we begin to lose control over the direction of our lives," the counselor explained.

"This will be a workshop where we learn from other people's experiences. We will talk out ideas and try to define them," Schroeder continued.

Citing a typical example, he quoted one kind of goal, "I'd like to go back to school but I can't see how it will happen."

Schroeder said such a goal can be talked over and methods of achieving outlined.

Another example Schroeder quoted, "I want to spend more time with my family. We never seem to do things together."

The workshop leaders, Schroeder and Smith, will help participants take stock of their lives – "examine your lifestyle before life dictates that you change," Schroeder said.

The first session of the Lifestyle Workshop will focus on looking at where one has been and where one is now.

The second session will look toward the future. The third session will set goals and focus on decision making necessary to achieve the goals.

Both the Stress Workshop and the Lifestyle Planning Workshop are limited to 30 individuals, so early registration is encouraged. For more details and to register call Charlevoix 547-6551.

Public should take an active role in health care planning, officials say

Hospital beds througout the state will be reduced by 3,800. No beds, however, will be cut from the 18-county Health Systems Agency region No. 7, which includes Charlevoix, Emmet and Antrim counties.

The hot debate waged in the past months, over the number of excess beds dramatizes the problems of health care planning.

Richard Krueger, administrator of Charlevoix Area Hospital, agrees with Don Cohen, director of Resource Development at Northern Michigan Health Systems Agency (NMHSA). "the public must become more aware of health care planning and take an active role."

"Health care planning is in its infancy," Cohen recently observed.

Health care planning, Cohen explained, is an attempt to balance the public's need with reasonable cost containment.

At the Northern Michigan Health Systems Agency offices in Petoskey planners develop a regional health systems plan which help its board of directors determine what hospitals may expand, what types of expansion they can undertake, how many hospital beds are needed, and what medical equipment – from simple X-ray machines to sophisticated CAT Scanners – can be added and where. The agency also addresses issues of mental health, substance abuse and preventive medicine.

The decision makers are people from throughout the region, running approximately from Manistee across the state and up to the Straits. Both providers – doctors, nurses and hospital administrators and others in the medical field – and consumers, people from the communities, participate in the planning process.

Among the consumers who serve NMHSA from Charlevoix County are Barb Fels, Charlevoix, J. Richard Smith, Boyne City, and Keith Annear, East Jordan. These individuals and their colleagues devote long hours as volunteers, listening to, assessing and deciding upon hospital and other health facility certificates of need.

When Charlevoix Area Hospital embarked on its expansion and renovation project it needed the approval of NMHSA, along with the State Department of Public Health. Without those approvals the hospital could not proceed without losing state, federal and Blue Cross reimbursement funds.

Charlevoix Area Hospital received those approvals last month.

But, as Annear stated recently, "If the public values such small community hospitals as Charlevoix, it should take a more active role in health care planning."

Administrator Krueger said, "The public must be aware of planning and the limitations it may bring in services.

"The public hears about costs and bed reductions. It should be aware that health care can become, in a sense, rationed, through reduction or limitation of hospital beds.

"The health systems agencies will have tough decisions to make," Krueger said.

Cohen explained that a combination of population statistics and adjustments factors (such as distance) are used to arrive at the proper number of beds for a given region. As a result some downstate regions, such as Region No. 1, Southeastern Michigan, face reductions of up to 2,529 beds.

Cohen described the system as a marketing methodology. "It is based on a study of zip codes of patients using each hospital, their age, sex and type of care. This way we know the market penetration of each hospital. And we know where patients from each zip code go."

Once these statistics are compiled, Cohen said, his agency can determine if people in Charlevoix, for example, are using Charlevoix Area Hospital, and if people from other areas are using the hospital as well.

Those facts played ad important role in helping Charlevoix Area Hospital gain approval for its expansion, as the use of the hospital as increased dramatically in the last several years.

Cohen added that a lot of factors are considered, including if the people using the hospital are new or people changing from another hospital.

Charlevoix Area Hospital has had an increase in use while simultaneously decreasing the number of days a patient is hospitalized, which is the sort of cost-containment the agency applauds.

Cohen said, "We have two basic responsibilities in health care planning: to plan for the development of health care for the projected population; and to contain costs, which frequently means not duplicating services within a region."

And speaking about the future of smaller hospitals, Cohen commented, "Community oriented hospitals are typically less expensive. And we place value on the consideration of convenience. We don't want people to have to travel hundreds of miles."

But, he added, medical technology planning, now in its early stage, means that expensive equipment such as CAT Scanners will be limited in an area, so that the public does not carry the burden of excessive costs.

An area into which the health planning agencies are just entering is the study of the difference between community hospitals and secondary or referral hospitals.

"One question is, if there is a difference between these types of hospitals, should there be a difference in planning methodology?" Cohen asked.

With the advent of health care planning, "the man in the street must become the informed man in the street," J. Richard Smith said. "If people don't become knowledgeable the system of local planning will give way to government take over."

Smith and other consumers on the planning boards urge people to attend meetings, speak out and write letters, to let the agency know their concerns.

"The only way health care plans can reflect the people's concerns is if the people attend meetings and speak out."

Northern Michigan Health Systems Agency meets every 2nd Wednesday of the month in Gaylord at The Chalet Motor Inn.

Committee meetings and special issue meetings are regularly announced. Citizens who want to take a more active role can call local representatives on the agency board, write to the agency in Petoskey, or contact Charlevoix Area Hospital administrator.

Symposium on sailing May 4-6,

Jobson to be the featured speaker

May marks the beginning of the sailing season and northern Michigan offers several recreational options for those interested in learning or improving sailing skills, as well as anyone seeking to charter a skippered cruise.

Of particular interest this spring is "Sail Plan '79" the first annual symposium on all aspects of sailing and sailing techniques for raw beginners as well as experienced, racing sailors. The conference will be held on May 4, 5, and 6 at the Park Place Motor Inn in Traverse City, with accommodations available at the hotel and local affiliated campgrounds.

The weekend will entail a party Friday night with a special film presentation, lecture classes Saturday and Sunday, banquet Saturday night, prize drawings, exhibits and a special racing presentation Sunday afternoon. Ticket options include full weekend programs from $45 to $60, or tickets may be purchased to individual activities. Seminar instructors compose an impressive list, accented by names as: Peter Barrett, Tim Stern, Peter Harken and Ian Bruce, which have already attracted symposium registrations from Indiana, Virgina, Minnesota, Wisconsin and other states. Lecture topics range from "How to Choose a Boat" and "Basic Sailing Theory" to "Rig, Design, Tuning and Management".

Gary Jobson, co-author of The Racing Edge and frequent contributor to popular yachting magazines, is the featured speaker for Saturday night. Jobson has coordinated many sailing seminars, coached sailing at the United States Naval Academy and now serves on the U.S. Olympic Yachting Committee. He will host the special presentation for racing sailors Sunday afternoon, "The Racers Edge".

"Sail Plan '79" provides an opportunity for boat makers, instructors and harbors to return both dollars and effort to the sportsmen whose interests support them and their work as all profits from the conference will be donated to various sailing scholarships and programs.

If you're interested in chartering a sailing craft for a holiday this summer, services are available through Traverse City marinas with and without skipper. The Irish Boat Yard in Charlevoix offers cruises on a 35 foot Pierson sailboat for a maximum of six passengers. Cruises range from four hours at $30 per person (with an $80 minimum), to seven days for two passengers at $840 with meals included. The Sail Shack, Traverse City, offers yet a wider variety of charter options for the Grand Traverse Bay area. Rental sailboats are available up to 22 feet for day sails. Over-night cruises range on craft from 22-32 feet for three to seven people. Craft are rented on a daily basis from $80 to $120, depending on size, with hourly rates also offered. Skippers are also available for $80 per day or $15 per hour. The marinas hope to begin rental and cruises Memorial Day weekend and are accepting reservations now.

Irish to handle Valiant-Esprit

Irish Boat Shop, Inc. will be the area's authorized dealer for Valiant Yacht Corporation's offshore sailing boats.

Irish Boat Shop, Inc. has two major marina-boatyard complexes, one at Charlevoix and one at Harbor Springs.

"We are delighted to have been selected to represent the Valiant-Esprit line of custom quality cruising sailboats," company President David Irish said. "These top quality boats from the board of Bob Perry represent the best in American boat-building today."

Currently, the line includes the Valiant 40, a fast offshore cruising cutter; the Esprit 37 sloop and the Valiant 32. Also on Perry's drawing board is a Pilot House version of the Valiant 40 and the Valiant 50.

Initially, a Valiant 40 and Esprit 37 are available for inspection at the Irish locations. A Valiant 32 is expected soon.

Also, to provide additional opportunity for Great Lakes area sailors to inspect the Valiant-Esprit sailing boats, service outlets will soon be located in Chicago, Ill. and Bayfield, Wis.

Meanwhile, additional information can be obtained by writing or calling Irish Boat Shop, Inc., 400 Bay Street, Harbor Springs or at Stover Road, Charlevoix.

Sometimes 'Old friends' are best

Every now and then an instrumental tune finds its way up into the ranks of popular music, making us realize that the bridge between classical and popular music does not need to be so cavernous as it sometimes appears. Frank Mills' "Music Box Dancer" is a delightful little melody and is currently receiving air play much to the welcome relief of our ears. Just to hear a light little composition which follows all the rules is a pleasure in itself.

Even if you are a popular music fan, every once in a while you get to a saturation point with AM Rado. The other day, I reached that point, turned it off and dug out some old friends: Grofe's "Grand Canyon Suite," Debussy's "Claire de Lune," and some more recent acquaintances like "Nadia's Theme" and Hagwood Hardy's "the Homecoming". It felt wonderful. Some days I do that with music from my favorite plays. There is so much to choose from and enjoy that we owe it to ourselves to sample a little of it all. Even under the commercialism and sometimes cacophony of rock, is music and by the same token, somewhere within the genius of Tchaikovsky is popularity. I feel a responsibility of sorts to try to appreciate the best of it all.

The problem is, that we live in a relatively culture-starved area. For all its peace and natural beauty, we have to search out anything cultural in Northern Michigan. Because of radio, we can handle a concert given by a popular group much more easily than we can an opera or a ballet when it comes to town. It is almost a process of re-education for ourselves and education for our children. We hardly know how to cope. For a great majority, the arts are only vaguely familiar. They lay dormant and are ressurected once or twice a year in hopes of keeping alive the spirit of greatness that might otherwise be neglected. For those of us who have been exposed to the fine arts at home or in the university, it's almost a deprivation. There's simply something lacking when you fall into the routine of spending 75 percent of your time mopping floors to the sound of the BeeGee's.

One of the most rewarding trips of last summer was to Interlochen where the family could walk around and absorb the atmosphere. It went without saying that in truth, there is something cultural happening in the world and we ought not miss it for our sake or that of our children. Concerts, plays, operas, ballets and popular music are all part of a cultural heritage we enjoy. It's just a little more difficult for us to offer our children the less accessible art forms. I think it's worth the effort, however, so that one day the children in meeting one of these forms on a more intimate basis than mere exposure, can feel as though they are having a reunion with an old friend instead of being forced to meet with a stranger.

Anne Kelly is a Charlevoix resident with interests in the arts.

NIGHT GIFT

I came to your room tonight little almost-3-year-old.
I felt depressed, and I wanted to hold you, and know you were really here,
and really mine to love.

I lay down beside you, and held you to my arms.
I kissed you and whispered, "I love you."

You whispered back, "I love you."
Then your eyes opened "Frank's mama?"
I didn't understand.
Again, "Frank's mama?" "Yes, son."

You smiled, and reached up to kiss me
And rolled over to go to sleep again.

What a gift! What a gift is my little almost-3-year-old.

Civic theatre presents 'Sweet Charity'

Bethe Carpenter

Sue Fisher

Everyone is dancing to the music of "Sweet Charity."

This fast-paced musical comedy by Niel Simon will be performed by the Little Traverse Civic Theatre May 3, 4, 5, 8, 10, 11 and 12 at the Petoskey High School auditorium. And, theatre performers say, it is sure to delight the old and young alike. Some of the well known musical numbers include "If My Friends Could See Me Now," "Big Spender" and "There's Gotta Be Something Better."

Stage director Doug Flewelling, vocal director Wil Moyer, orchestra director Wayne Fisher and choreographer Diana Mason have meshed the talents of 30 local artists in this entertaining production.

Sue Fisher plays Charity and comes off warm and vibrant. She has an extensive background in drama and music and is presently on the Little Traverse Civic Theatre Board of Directors. She is also active in the Crooked Tree Arts Council.

Bethe Carpenter and Pat Steadman play Helene and Nickie in the production. Both have been involved in theatre for the past five years. They form a lively pair that is sure to capture your heart and tickle your funny bone.

The male leads are held by Gene Beach, Roy Harvey, Fred Becker and Craig Cottrill. These men, in their zany antics, come across as humorous yet warm and genuine.

The dancers provide additional zip, and when coupled with the chorus, offers a delight to the audio and visual senses.

The orchestra blends together beautifully and helps establish the mood which changes frequently from mellow to light.

Tickets for the musical comedy can be purchased ($4 per seat) at area drug stores, from theatre members or at the door.

Nutritionist named

Diane Moore will be the project nutritionist for District Health Department #3's new Diabetes Control Study Project.

District Health Department Number 3 (Antrim, Charlevoix, Emmet and Otsego counties) has received a grant from the Michigan Department of Public Health to conduct an "Applied Research Project" in relation to the control of diabetes. This control is provided through increased follow-up services and home visits to individuals diagnosed as diabetics.

Northwestern Michigan has a higher rate of diabetes than the national average. This could be due, in part, to the area's high percentage of senior citizens. According to Dr. James T. Harrison, medical director for the District Health Department, "available evidence indicates that ineffective dietary management is a primary reason for poor control in most diabetics." Studies continually show that compliance with prescribed diabetis diets is very poor.

The Health Department has employed Ms. Moore as a full time nutritionist. She will provide nutritional consultation visits to diagnosed diabetics, under the direction of their private physician. The clientele will be restricted to the residents served by District Health Department #3 in Antrim, Charlevoix, Emmet and Otsego counties. These visits will be followed by a community health aide, that has been trained in the nutritional management of diabetes. The para-professional, under supervision by the nutritionist, will carry out specific assigned tasks implementing the nutritional care plan. Activities would include reinforcement of basic instruction and assistance of food shopping and preparation. The paraprofessional will provide feedback by reporting observations made in the home environment to the nutritionist and through the nutritionist to the physician.

After World War I, Schurrer painted cathedrals

George Schurrer
Part II

By KATHERINE AMY

In Europe Schurrer had been a cathedral artist. After World War I part of the reparations demanded of Germany was repair of damaged cathedrals. The German government would contact its art-engineering colleges – all engineering students in Germany at that time were also art students – and the colleges would send students to do this work. For payment instead of money the students would receive college credit. Schurrer was an especially fine ortist. With college completed, he made his fortune as a cathedral artist. To repair a dome he would have to work flat on his back on scaffolding about 65 feet high. The fresco work had to be done section-by-section, day-by-day because the wet plaster with which he was working would dry out in a day's time. The panel would be pushed into the wet plaster about a quarter of an inch deep with a paint brush. A separate paintbrush would be used for each color, and the shading would be done by using more or less paint on one brush. The perspective was difficult because of the distance of the fresco on the dome from the viewer on the floor and also because of the exaggeration needed. For example, the head of a figore might have to be two feet large; aod the colored part of the eye of that head, four inches.

Fresco work is fast becoming a lost art. During World War II many of the old castles and old cathedrals of Holland, France, Belgium, Poland, Austria, and Germany where Schurrer had done restoratiun wurk were destroyed. His work has been lost, but not his knowledge of it.

His knowledge was hard won. It began beautifully in the small German town of Itzbngen where he was born April 4, 1896. Itclingen is now ineorporated into Bupfingen which is about 40 miles from Stuttgart. When he was 10 years old he had completed his work there and had gone on to Nordlingen where he attended and completed training in the volkschule at 13, oberschule at 15, and trade school for engineering and art at 17. He then began a four year program in engineering and art at Stuttgart; but with more than one and a half years of that four year program completed, he was drafted into the army. It would be nine and a half years more before he would graduate from an urt-engineering college.

During this time he served in the army for four years, nine months uf it as a forward observer at Verdun. He was woondel six times, the head and lung wounds making it necessary to remain at hume, sick, for twu and a half years after his army discharge. His lung wound had left him too weakened to pursue the on-the-job training the engineering part of his studies required, so Schurrer became an artist, repairing church frescoes in Munster, W. for one year. This work was well-paid in 1921, and George lived well, enjoying his reputation as a musictan – he played mandolin at local parties and dnnces – and as an artist. He was able to save about $1000. At that time this was quite a sum for a handsone young man to bank. And Schurrer was handsome – a Clark Gable look alike – and young, 25 years old.

Then came Europe's depression. A pound of butter was worth more than a man's wages for a week. Whole apartment buildings sold fur $5 American. His savings wiped out, Schurrer decided tn go back to eullege. He financed himself by working from 6 o'clock a.m. to 12 o'clock noon to make money for college expenses at Hildersheim. He attended college frum 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. Then he tended bar from 7 p.m. to 1 a.m. tu make money for living expenses. (During his summer six week break, for college credit, he was sent by his college tu Hulland, Belgium, France and Poland to measure for the rhurch restorations demanded from the German government as reparations.) He graduated from the art and engineering college at Hildersheim, Hanover on Jan. 1, 1925, when he was 28 years old.

As an artist in post depression Germany Schurrer could make a good living, but he was young, talented, confident, and had a taste for adventure. He heard in Hamburg that it was better in Amerlca, and an artist could make a fortune. He decided to go tu the New World, at least for a few years. he has since made his life here, as an artist made and lost another fortune, became an American citizeu, married, raised two children, and put down deep roots in two enmmunities.

When he arrived in New York he was wearing a cut-away coat, as befitted an artist, and a sign around his neck, as befitted an immigrant who knew no English. He was bound for a chicken farm in Nebraska and his father's cousin Therisa whu had supplied him $320 boat tieket and wanted him to work un the farm, then buy it. But Schurrer had no intention of becoming a chicken farmer.

The train for Norfolk, Neb. stopped for seven hours in Chicago. He had the address and phone number of a sister of another of his father's cousins who lived there. He could not speak English, but he could dial a telephone, and that is what he did. In fact, he dialed every phone in the Dearborn Street Station. His nickel came back each time. Grace Tennie was not at home.

Disappointed, Schurrer decided he would have to go on to Nebraska But how would Therisa recognize him? She had not seen him since he was four years old. The non-German-speaking immigration official in charge of Schurrer's proper transit was obviously annoyed with her troublesome charge.

Furtunately for Schurrer, a friendly German-speaking stranger noticed all this. He made the phone call to Nebraska. By coincidence, he even knew Therisa. She was to meet him on a certain corner bench.

Still wearing the cut-away coat and the sign around his neck, Schurrer arrived at the Norfolk, Neb. station and waited at the certain corner bench. He waited for a very long time. The station was now empty of people. Finally a wuman he had seen at the station earlier came in again. Therisa had seen him and his sign before, but had hardly expected her future farm laborer to be so nattily dressed.

The mile square farm raised curn for 5000 chickens and produced 1000 eggs a day which sold for 10 cents a dozen. The farm also had 12 horses, which Schurrer dearly loved, but he did not love chicken farming. After two months even Therisa decided that a chicken farmer Schurrer was not!

Just four years before she had sponsured another German immigrant, a girl named Therisa Moniger who had been Schurrer's former classmate in their hometown of Itzlingen. She was now working as a maid in a large roominghouse io Chicago. Armed with this other Therisa's name and address Schurrer again set oot for Chicago, still in his cut-away, but without his sign. He had two month's familiarity with the English language and the knowledge that this Therisa would recognize him. But recognize hun she did not; at least, not at first. Northwestern Depot was perhaps Chicago's very largest and very busiest station, and a cut-away coat did not seem to be standard traveling attire for German immigrants. But as the station cleared out, she did finally recognize him.

She was accompanied by her friend Madeline who took them to Madeline's mother and father. They found him a room in their apartment building and helped him find a temporary job paying $13 a week washing cars on an automubile assembly line. He accepted their breakfast and dinner invitations for the first week until he was more familiar with his surroundings and afterwards as a more or less regular Sunday dinner guest. And after a week he noticed their telephone number, 7473. The American pronunciation was different from the French pronunciation he had expected, but this telephne number belonged to the sister of the wuman married to his father's cousin, the mayor of Itzlingen. This was the Graee Tennie he had tried tu contact two months ago when he was first in Chicago.

Editor's note: George Schurrer is a summer resident of Charlevoix. The first installment of this story told about his unique home at North Point.

CHARLEVOIX COUNCIL MINUTES

SPECIAL MEETING

The Common Council of the City of Charlevoix met in a Special Council Meeting on the above date and time with Deputy Mayor Wood presiding. Councilmen present: Porter, Roloff, Wood, Muma, and Whitley. Absent: Councilman Timms.

The City Clerk read a proposed Resolution regarding the City borrowing 160,000.00 in tax anticipation notes for general operating purposes. Enter Councilman Timms. Oscar Stroud, a member of the General Pubbc present, suggested that the City offer a 10% discount to taxpayers for early payment of their taxes in order to secure the necessary funds rather than borrowing the funds and paying interest. Acting City Attorney Berlage stated that, in his professional opinion, Mr. Stroud's proposal would not be legal. Council discussed at length the reasons that it is necessary for the City to borrow money at this particular time. Acting City Manager Brinker stated that the cash flow problem is a result of a severe cut in the millage in a previous year and a cut in State shared funds.

Having lawn problems?
Get help May 15

Many lawns woke up this spring with a new face after the snow left and their owners have been calling the Charlevoix County Extensive Office for help.

A small burrowing animal was living under the snow and made tunnels under the grass. These tunnels killed the grass and were very unsightly. This lawn must be repaired.

To answer this question and others on wildlife control Ed Rebnian, Charlevoix County Extensive director has set up a meeting on Tuesday afternoon May 15, at 1:30 p.m. at Whiting Park. All home owners in the area are welcome to come the the program.

The main speaker will be Glen R. Dudderar, an extensive specialist in Wildlife Control at Michigan State University. A display and exhibits are also planned.

The meeting will start with about one hour on burrowing animals that pester the lawns and gardens of home owners such as field mice, moles, voles and shrews. Another hour will be on other home owner problems such as wood peckers, skunks, rabbits, or anythiog else.

safely be done by storing the bundles closer together. They do not think that overheating will be a problem.

Axtell said that after storage at Big Rock, fuel is shipped out to be reprocessed. This practice is now suspended because of President Carter's moratorium on breeder reactors. Big Rock's last shipment of spent fuel was in 1973.

After locking out of the containment sphere, each person moved a GM (Geiger-Mueller) probe across his hands and feet, to see if they had picked up any radioactive contamination. No one tripped the alarm buttons, the dial on the gauges barely moved; even so Axtell assured the entourage, contamination could be washed off with soap and water.

Before leaving Big Rock, the group was shown the generators from which the 75 megawatt plant is capable of producing enough electricity to serve a population of 100,000.

Editor's note: In future articles spokespersons for anti-nuclear groups, the NRC, and pro-nuclear groups will be interviewed. The Courier will try and present the material in a manner that, hopefully, will help everyone better understand the issues.

no longer useful for the plant's fission process, must be stored about 1,000 years according to Axtell. The spent fuel's most toxic radioactive elements are St. 90 and I 136, which McNamara had earlier explained.

"After 1,000 years in salt mines the radioactivity would be about the same as it was in the natural state, as it was when mined," Axtell stated.

But he acknowledged that even then he wouldn't let his children play with it, that it was still very dangerous.

Big Rock is currently applying to the NRC to expand its fuel storage capacity on site. They are asking to expand from 194 bundles to 415, which they say can fishing violations but should be put on notice that Michigan law does not allow citizens to do anything but report such activity."

Gov. William Milliken said he was "greatly concerned that the closure was limited to May 15."

Millken said the best way to avoid violence would be "to continue a closure and to seek the cooperation of local law enforcement to assist the tribe in enforcing its own regulations."

Meanwhile, Robert Hybl, president of "Stop Gill Netting," reiterated that SGN will stay within the law while it patrols and monitors gill net fishing in the area.

Some members of SGN said it would take "violence" to solve the issue. Hybl, however, said he will not condone violence.

"In a volatile issue like this, you're going to have this radical element," he said. "But I don't think it reflects the majority of the organization."

Hybl said SGN will rent six billboards and start a publicity campaign to make the public aware of the "problems."

Ziff Corp. acquires Norcross

Martin Pompadur, president of Ziff Corporation, today announced the acquisition of Norcross Inc. Recently, Ziff Corporation completed the acquisition of Rust Craft Greeting Cards, Inc. These acquisitions will now comprise one of the largest international companies deafing in the manufacture and distribution of greeting cards and allied products. (Ziff also acquired the six television stations owned by Rust Craft

Pompadur stated that Ziff's purchase of these two companies reflects a long term commitment to the greeting card industry and has been interpreted as such by the customers and employees of both corporations.

Pompadur stressed that the acquisitions give Ziff a presence in all channels of distribition and strengthens both companies within the greeting card industry. Since Rust Craft sells primarily to mass merchandisers, drug stores and variety chains and Norcross sells primarily to department stores and independent card shops, the two organizations will continue to operate independently of one another. Present management of both companies will continue. Initial plans include a thorough upgrading of all services to customers and a significant investment in product development.

Prior to the acquisitions of Rust Craft and Norcross, Ziff Corporation was engaged primarily in publishing consumer, business and trade magazines and periodicals through its wholly-owned subsidiary, Ziff-Davis Publishing Company — the world's largest publishers of special interest magazines. Among its consumer magazines are Boating, Car and Driver, Cycle, Flying, Modern Bride, Popular Electronics, Popular Photography, Psychology Today, Stereo Review, and Yachting; Ziff-Davis Publishing Company also produces annuals, a group of business and trade publications directed to travel and tourism and several publications dedicated to the aviation industry.

The publishing operation of Ziff Corporation conducts extensive market research which will be of tremendous benefit to both greeting card companies in their product development marketing and sales activities. These and other significant resources of Ziff Corporation will be made available to both Norcross and Rust Craft.

Pompadur indicated that the greeting card business has much in common with magazine publishing. As a distributor of magazines, Ziff already deals with many of American's largest retailers; there is also a similarity to the product aspect of greeting cards, since the same technologies are used in the manufacture of both magazines and greeting cards.

FAITH SEES NO DECLINE IN THE INCIDENCE OF MARRIAGE

The picture of a radiant bride on the society page of your newspaper has always been a lovely sight to behold; but in this age of the so-called "new morality" when all our cultural traditions would seem to have been swept away, it has an even greater significance. It symbolizes our assurance that there is still hope for our civilization. The self-appointed prophets would have us believe that marriage is on the way out, as they point triumphantly to the latest divorce statistics. However, as you will learn through the Bible and the Church of your choice, marriage and the family unit have been with us since the very dawn of the human race, and the antics of a small but vocal minority are not likely to succeed in abolishing these sacred institutions that form tha very foundation of our society.

No society has ever survived after its family life deteriorated.
—Dr. Paul Popenoe

"Marriage is honorable in all."

Oil spill cleaned

Nearly 200 gallons of heavy brown oil that was discharged into Lake Michigan has been cleaned up, Coast Guard officials say.

The oil was discharged into the lake on April 2. It spread out over a mile of beach and was contained near the shoreline by tee 10 to 50 yards offshore.

According to the Coast Guard, the oil probably came from an abandoned underground storage tank located on Charlevoix Avenue.

Coast Guard personnel from Sault Ste. Marie began clean up operations April 3 using the services of Land and Lakes Environmental Contractors. Some ice was cut away so an oil containment boom could be deployed. The trapped oil was then soaked up and removed with absorbent material.

The Coast Guard said the clean up proceeded "satisfactorily" until the April 5 wind storm. High winds blew from offshore forcing large sheets of ice onto the beach. The oil containment boom was driven ashore and three to six feet of shoreline was buried under two to four feet of rafted ice.

The ice was too soft to work safely on. After one man fell through, clean up efforts were suspended. Coast Guard personnel continued to monitor the situation. The clean up resumed on April 12 when oil was found coming to the surface, in cracks and fissures that had developed in the ice, and was removed.

By the following day the ice had receded five to ten feet from the shoreline and containied the oil the same way a boom would have. Oil soaked ice was removed to a temporary filtration pond constructed for this purpose. The flow of the water from a storm sewer outfall melted the ice and the oil skimmed off the top of the pond.

By April 17 most of the oil had been removed. A portable steamer was then used to clean off oiled rocks.

On the morning of April 19, the last few pockets of oil were removed and the clean up secured.

Mackinaw Island

City after shoreline property

State Senator Mitch Irwin (D-Sault Ste. Marie) has announced the withdrawal of Mackinac Island State Park Commission's application for surplus property on Mackinac Island.

"I am very pleased with the courtesy that the Mackinac Island State Park Commission has shown the City of Mackinac Island," Irwin said. "To see state and local governmental units working together for the good of the people on Mackinac Island is gratifying."

The parcel of land in question faces a southwest direction on the shoreline. Previously, it has been used as a control-house for the Round Island Light Station.

The City of Mackinac Island will use this property for park purposes, if their application is approved by the Department of Interior.

"This land is greatly needed in order to accommodate the ever-increasing needs and demands of summer tourism on Mackinac Island," Irwin said. "The City of Mackinac Island will continue to work towards the permanent transfer of land from the Department of Interior to the City of Mackinac Island."

Beaver Island

Two propositions on ballot

Residents on the Emerald Isle will be voting on two separate school bond issues June 11.

Proposition I asks for $160,000 to erect, furnish and equip a shop addition to the Beaver Island Community School.

Proposition II asks for $215,000 to erect, furnish and equip a multi-purpose addition to the school.

The proposed projects would enhance the vocational education and athletic areas of the school, and would also provide space for group meetings.

If both propositions pass, the ratio of debt to valuation would be 5.6 percent.

The enrollment at the school remains stable, but a 10 percent increase is anticipated within five years.

Charlevoix

Four file petitions

Four candidates will be vying for two positions on the Char-Em Intermediate Board of Education.

Filing nominating petitions were Richard Dubin, Opal Goldsmith, Kenneth Morin and James O'Brien. The two positions are for six years.

Dubin is an incumbent. Judy Juilleret decided not seek re-election.

The election is June 11.

Wooten seeks permit

James A. Wooten, president of Charlevoix Shores Estates Association Inc., has applied to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers for a permit to construct a boat ramp and temporary pier in Lake Charlevoix off Yachtmans Park in Charlevoix Shores Estates.

Charlevoix Shores Estates is near Ironton.

The proposed 10 X 30 foot pre-cast concrete plank boat ramp would be placed on natural ground and would extend about 24 feet lakeward from the shoreline.

A temporary "L" shaped aluminum pier would extend about 40 feet lakeward from the shoreline. The pier would be placed in the spring and removed in the fall of each year.

The ramp and pier would provide a launching facility and dockage for pleasure craft.

Anyone wishing to comment on the proposed work should do so immediately by writing the U.S. Corps of Engineers, Box 1027, Detroit, 48231. All responses must refer to public notice process number 790418-78-S-127.

Carla Henry and Barry Wimmer of Charlevoix participated in a music recital at Petoskey High School Thursday. Carla, who has been playing the accordion for 10 months, played "Stars and Stripes Forever," while Barry, who has been playing the accordion for a year, selected "Two Guitars." Both are students of Norman DeJonghe of Charlevoix. The recital was sponsored by ABC Music of Petoskey. Charlotte Ross Lee was the master of ceremonies.

Big Rock could be in operation by September

Russell Youngdahl

A Consumers Power official Friday said the Big Rock Point nuclear plant will probably be shut down until September.

Russell Youngdahl, executive vice president for energy supply, told reporters the utility company is studying three alternatives to correct a leak in the reactor vessel. The leak was discovered on Friday, April 20 during tests that were being conducted prior to starting up the plant. The facility had been shut down since Feb. 2 for refueling and maintenance.

Youngdahl said the seepage of water from the leak was slight - about two quarts - and that "at no time did it constitute a safety hazard to the public or employees." He added the water had only "very low amounts of radioactivity" and that it was contained within the containment building.

Youngdahl said he thought the press had blown the incident "a little out of proportion."

According to Russell DeWitt, Consumers Power's manager for nuclear production, the leak was first noticed about 4 a.m. He said the start up test was halted and a maintenance team was called in to locate the cause of the problem and take corrective action. However, when another pressure test was conducted water continued to leak. DeWitt said he ordered a halt to the start up testing at about 3:20 p.m. and notified the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

The problem, according to Robert Haueter, director of special projects for Consumers Power, apparently resulted from a slight crack in a weld which attaches control rod equipment to the reactor. Haueter is heading a task force that is studying the problem.

Haueter said measurements will be taken of the affected area to determine that there is no metal damage. One of the alternatives being considered to correct the problem is use of a device to expand the housing in which the control rod equipment is located. Another alternative is a mechanical seal.

All methods will be tested on special full-size mock-ups of the control rod housing, Haueter said.

Youngdahl said repair work would probably start in 10 weeks. He said the company would also correct a loose diffuser plate that was discovered by officials who were inspecting the leak.

Company officials said the shut down is costing company stockholders and customers approximately $30,000 per day to replace the energy produced at Big Rock.

How much radiation can body absorb? Views differ

By SARA GAY DAMMANN
Special to the Courier

Radiation, what it is and what it does, is central to the nuclear power debate.

Among scientists and other experts, on all sides of the issue, there are wide differences of opinion.

Recently two people with disparate views on the subject were interviewed: Charles Axtell, health physicist at Big Rock Point Power Plant and Dr. Gerald Drake, Petoskey physician who has devoted much of the last 10 years to the subject. They were interviewed separately.

The American Heritage Dictionary defines radioactivity as "the emission of radiation, either directly from unstable atomic nuclei or as a consequence of nuclear fission."

Radiation is a form of energy. Atoms of radioactive elements are not stable, they give off this energy which can generally be destructive or cause changes in plant and animal cells.

A nuclear reaction – fission – is the process used at Big Rock to produce the heat used in the generation of electricity.

As a result of fission, many unstable, or radioactive elements are produced, Dr. Drake explained. Four of these are Iodine 129, Tritium, Krypton 85, and Actinides, which include Plutonium 239.

Environmental Protection Agency documents show that these four elements are the main ones considered when trying to identify potential health hazards from the use of nuclear energy.

Explaining from a physicians point of view, what radiation exposures can do to a person, Drake said.

When radiation penetrates cells, the cell behavior may be altered in such a way to kill the cell, cause it to become cancerous or produce genetic defects."

The question which is being posed repeatedly is what levels of radiation are dangerous?

The National Geographic recently published a newsfeature which stated that "radiobiologists regard a single dose to the whole body of 600 rems–600,000 millirems – as lethal to most people: 100 whole body rems can cause radiation sickness; 10 can damage lymph nodes and spleen and decrease the bone marrow and blood cells, although the symptoms are not felt."

Rem and Rad are terms used by scientists to describe radiation dosages.

Drake and Axtell both define a Rad as a "unit of absorbed radiation."

A Rem, Drake said is a "Rad times a quality factor times a distribution factor." Quality, he said, refers to how damaging it is and distribution refers to the body tissues in which it is most likely to settle.

Scientists agree that everyone is daily bathed in radiation from natural sources.

"Cosmic rays from space, for example, give a person about 40 millirems a year, at sea level," writes Donald J. Frederick in the Geographic.

Natural background radiation for the average person in Michigan, Axtell said is about 120 millirems a year.

For comparative purposes Axtell said the following contribute to our radiation doses: colored TV, 30 millirems a year; chest X-ray 30-100; and living in a brick home adds another 40-80 millirems.

As writer Frederick explained, 600 rems or about 600,000 millirems is lethal.

But the health consequences of low level doses are not clear.

At Big Rock, according to Axtell, federal limits would permit 10 millirems a year of gamma radiation to level through the stack. Another 15 millirems of Iodine and another 20 millirems of beta radiation would be allowed under federal regulation. Axtell said, however, that Big Rock only produced 1 millirem last year.

Water discharged into Lake Michigan from the cooling system and waste water (not water inside the reactor) contributes less than 3 millirems, as permitted by the NRC.

Axtell pointed out that this was far less than one chest X-ray.

Drake agreed, "Big Rock has not exceeded federal limits. But I also agree that George Wald, Nobel laureate, biology professor at Harvard, who said 'Any dose of radiation is an overdose,'"

He continued, "Xrays are used as diagnostic procedures on sick people and we have to weigh the risk from radiation exposure with the possible greater risks that can come from not making the appropriate diagnosis."

He said the differences between Xrays and exposure to radiation from fission products may be considerable.

"The nuclear power industry is fond of saying, "A rem is a rem is a rem,'" Drake quoted.

"But a rem of Xrays which leaves no radiation within the body, only its effects, may be quite different from a rem of radiation from fission products which acts over lung periods of time and can remain within the cell."

Iodine 129, one fission product, gives off beta and gamma particles, Drake said. Plutonium gives off alpha particles.

The basic difference between gamma, beta and alpha emission is their ability to penetrate skin or other barriers.

Gamma rays, like Xrays penetrate skin easily.

Iodine 129, Drake said, enters the metabolism of the thyroid gland. It has a half life of 17 million years, which means that if you had an ounce of Iodine 129, for example, 17 million years later you still have a half an ounce.

Krypton 85, a beta and gamma emmitter, another product of nuclear fission, is a gas which can be inhaled and can cross the lung membranes and enter the blood stream, and so is a medical concern.

Plutonium 239, on the otherhand, is an alpha emitter. Because alpha particles do not easily penetrate the skin, one could have plutonium on ones hand and safely wash it off. It can be stopped by a sheet of paper. It takes lead to stop gamma rays.

There is no argument between nuclear spokesmen and opponents on the foregoing statements.

"But, once inside a cell alpha particles of plutonium can get at the genetic material of the DNA molecule," Drake said.

If inhaled, plutonium may become highly toxic, the physician added. It seeks first the lungs and then may go to the lymph nodes of the lungs or enter the blood and seek out bone.

Plutonium is essential to building a long lasting nuclear economy, everyone agrees.

At present nuclear power plants use uranium as their fuel. But, scientists agree, the world supply of uranium is limited.

"In order to have a significantly long lasting nuclear economy the present plan is to breed plutonium in breeder reactors," Drake stated.

Plutonium 239 is a man-made element, a by-product of the fission of uranium.

In 1969 Big Rock, as an experimental plant, used plutonium as its fuel. It was granted a license to use plutonium in 1972. At present Big Rock does not use Plutonium because reprocessing in this country has been shutdown.

One of former President Gerald Fords last acts as President was to halt the reprocessing of spent fuel. Ford did this, Drake said, because large quantities of plutonium created were a danger, particularly attractive to potential terrorists.

President Jimmy Carter reconfirmed Ford's orders.

A major concern surrounding plutonium is the effects it may have on human reproductive cells. Experiments with animals have shown it damages the sperm reproducing cells in animals, creating the potential for genetic damage for generations.

Drake says "susceptability must be considered. We know some people are more susceptable to high blood pressure, diabetes and even to cancer itself. Reins must be considered in terms of susceptability, also."

Arguing that a rem is not always the same, Drake said we don't know if there is a difference in human response to natural radiation and man-made radiation.

"Fission could have a different effect on life than natural isotopes that have been here since the earth's crust was formed more than 5 billion years ago."

Frederick, writing for the Geographic, supports Drake, writing "certain parts of the body, such as the gonads, thyroid and bone marrow, are especially sensitive to radiation. Moreover, some radioisotopes have particular affinities, Strontium 90, for example, is a bone seeker, and iodine becomes concentrated in the thyroid, instead of being eliminated."

Another unknown is the cumulative effects of radiation exposure. Some types of radiation appear to be eliminated from the body, others, such as iodine do not.

Axtell pointed out that Big Rock's emissions are not as high as the minimums allowed by the NRC.

Drake argued that we do not know enough to say what is safe and quoted the EPA study which says there is a potential for a maximum of 40 deaths from exposure to Iodine 129 by the year 2020; of which 400 deaths by exposure to Tritium (another fission by-product) by the same year, of about 3,500 deaths by exposure to Krypton 85 by the same year; and 21,000 deaths by exposure to Actinides (such as plutonium) by the same year. These figures, published in Control rods are located in these 32 housing beneath the reactor. One of the housings leaked. The radioactive water was contained in a vessel below the housings.

Use up small cards and envelopes, Swartzfisher says

"Use up your small and undersized envelopes and cards before July 15," Postmaster Joe Schwartzfisher reminds customers. That's the date when the Postal Service's new size standards become effective.

The Charlevoix postmasters said that after July 15, envelopes and cards measuring less than 3½ inches high or 5 inches long will be returned to the sender if mailed.

Schwartzfisher said that because the envelope and greeting card industries have had more than three years to prepare for the new standards, few retailers should still be selling undersized pieces. Many consumers, however, are likely to still have smaller envelopes and cards in their supply of stationery.

The regulations also prohibit flimsy cards. In the future they must be at least seven-thousandths (.007) of an inch thick. An official post card, for instance, has a thickness of nine-thousandths of an inch.

Undersized pieces and flimsy cards are being banned because they can become trapped in other mail, tear and jam mail processing machinery. As a result, the letters of others can also be damaged.

The standards also affect oversized and odd-shaped pieces of mail. For first-class mail weighing one ounce or less, there will be a surcharge of 7 cents for pieces more than 6⅛ inches high or 11½ inches long. For more information, the postmaster suggests customers check with a post office window clerk.

MUCC: Winter navigation too costly

The strongest argument against winter navigation on the Great Lakes is economics, the Army Corps of Engineers was told.

A spokesman for the Michigan United Conservation Clubs (MUCC), one of the first and most forceful opponents of the Corps' year round shipping program, said the public has no faith in the economics advanced by the Corps to justify the program.

United States taxpayers "don't want billions of dollars in taxes going to benefit such a narrow industrial base" as would be served by year round navigation, Wayne Schmidt, MUCC staff ecologist, stated at a public hearing on winter navigation conducted here by the Corps.

"Even if the (Corps') benefit cost ratio was accurate, even ignoring the environmental costs to the Great Lakes and the social impacts to our citizens, people still don't want winter navigation," Schmidt declared.

He said the 100,000-member organization he represents took a formal position in 1977 holding that winter navigation is not in the best interest of the nation or Michigan and should be terminated immediately.

Several organizations, including MUCC, have promised a court challenge if the Corps continues the year round shipping program next winter, Schmidt said.

"We believe winter navigation will bring severe disruptions to the lives of citizens along the connecting waters of the Great Lakes, serious damage to shorelines and private property, destruction of natural resources, impairment to our tourist economy, an unacceptable threat of oil and chemical spills under ice, impacts to our state's railroad lines and an unacceptable economic subsidy to a narrow industrial base," the ecologist said.

A program to demonstrate the feasibility of shipping on the Great Lakes throughout the year that was begun by the Corps and the Coast Guard in 1971 is scheduled to end this year. The Corps has asked that the program be extended permanently by Congress, however.

At the same time, Congress is considering a separate proposal to extend the Great Lakes shipping season to Jan. 31 each year (give or take a couple of weeks, depending on weather), irrespective of the fate of the year round shipping program.

How one family feels about a home may be very different from the way another family reacts. For some, a home is simply a place to hang your hat, while for others, it is the center of all living. The importance placed on housing in the family will play a big part in the choices they make. For example, they may consider the following questions. Is space important? Efficiency? Easy maintenance? How much importance does the family place on how a house looks from the outside? Will the family be entertaining often? Center gets grant to help low income and ADC women

Special to the Courier

The Women's Resource Center in Petoskey has received one grant of $49,695 to conduct a 24-week educational and self-help program for low income women and ADC mothers in Charlevoix, Emmet, Antrim, Otsego, and Cheboygan counties, according to Jan Mancinelli, Center director.

The Center is also well on its way to attaining the necessary local funds so that it can receive money from the state to set up a spouse abuse shelter – a home for women who are victims of spouse abuse – in the same five-county area.

"We have raised $5,000 locally and need a total of $20,000 before we can receive money from the Domestic Violence and Prevention and Treatment Board, which was set up by the legislature last summer," she explained.

The total budget for the spouse abuse shelter will be $78,000, she said.

Meanwhile, however, local women, living on low or fixed incomes, or unemployed heads of households, will be eligible to participate in the 24-week program for which the Women's Resource Center has received a grant from the State Department of Education, Consumer and Home Economics Unit.

In Boyne City, East Jordan and Charlevoix, as well as seven other towns in the five counties, a series of workshops will be conducted. The workshops will deal with subjects ranging from personal growth to education and consumer skills.

Beginning in October the workshops will be held simultaneously in ten communities, so that travel and child care problems will be minimized.

Ms. Mancinelli pointed out that women participating in this program will also be eligible for child-care assistance from the department of social services.

The grant came to the Women's Resource Center through North Central Michigan College in Petoskey, where the Center's offices are located.

The funds will enable the Center to hire two full time and two part-time counselors who will conduct the workshops. The workshops will be free to eligible participants.

Advisory Boards will be established in each county to help identify participants and design the direction of the project. Staff members of the Women's Resource Center will conduct one-to-one counseling along with the workshops.

"The goals of this project," Ms. Mancinelli said, "is to lay out positive life alternatives for participants. For example," she continued, "Women with poor educational backgrounds will be shown how they can get a G.E.D. (high school equivalency diploma) and where they can go to get funds to help them attain it.

"We will explore vocational education training available through the college, as well," she said.

The first 8-week segment of the program will be workshops held in each community focussed on "personal growth" the center director explained.

"Basically we want to help women build their self-esteem. Help a person learn that she does have control over her own circumstances," she emphasized.

The personal growth workshops will include communication skills, helping people decide what are the important values in their own lives, and solving personal problems more effectively.

The second segment will be devoted to "parenting", according to Ms. Mancinelli. Issues to be studied include discipline, child development, childhood diseases and treatments – when to call the doctor – and accident and poisoning prevention.

The final 8 week segment will be focussed on "Consumer skills", Mrs. Mancinelli said. "We will discuss family budgeting, money management, energy conservation and management of time."

The project will begin Oct. 1.

Council approves condo site plan, discuss barriers for alleys

A site plan for a six unit condominium was approved Monday night by the Charlevoix City Council.

The condominium will be constructed off Pine River Lane overlooking Lake Michigan.

Jack Begrow presented the site plan to the council on behalf of Mr. and Mrs. John Hisey. The structure will have a basement, three levels, and a loft.

The property is already zoned multiple. The Charlevoix Planning Commission had approved the request at an earlier meeting.

Begrow said work will be done on the shoreline to prevent erosion.

Council also discussed placing barriers in alleys parallel to Dixon Avenue from Nichols to Nettleton streets.

The barriers would thus prevent vehicles from using the alleys for thoroughfares.

Residents from the area were in attendance at last night's meeting. Several voiced concern about vehicles speeding down the alleys and the children in the area who use the alleys for a playground.

"I'm scared to death about it," said Jill Stewart. "We're concerned about our children."

Council asked City Manager James Brinker to discuss putting barriers in the alleys with police chief Jack Mol in an attempt to alleviate the problem.

In other action, council:

Agreed to credit $3,099 to the electrical account of Charlevoix Manufacturing over the next five years (electric deposit refund).

Agreed to extend electricity to Loeb Creek Estates, a new 10 lot subdivision in Marion Township. The developer is to pay 100 percent of the material and labor costs.

Approved Poppy Days Sale for the American Legion Auxiliary May 17-19.

Proclaimed May 13-19 as Municipal Clerk's Week.

Agreed to sell Haynes Corporation a JS-8 diesel generator for $5,000.

Denied a lot split from the Charlevoix Public Schools on May Street. The lot split would have given the school's construction trade class two future sites on which to build homes.

Denied a lot split by Don Brown at 168 Dixon Avenue.

Approved a variance request from Terry Edger for construction of a pole building on an undersized lot.

Agreed to start Council meetings at 8 p.m. (effective first meeting in June) instead of 7:30.

Increased the ambulance rate from $30 to $40.

Agreed to extend docking privileges to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers for one year.

Agreed to a resolution requesting Gov. William Milliken to hold public hearings on the health and safety factors at the Big Rock Point nuclear plant and insist that the plant be kept out of operation until such time that it's safety is assured.

Learned that a grant request for state money to help finance improvements to the park stage was rejected because the city does not have a recreation plan.

Agreed to meet with the Charlevoix Planning Commission and review the sign ordinance.

School board to file this month for permission to sell bonds

The Charlevoix Board of Education, at its regular meeting Monday night, adopted a tentative time schedule for the new addition to the Charlevoix High School; name financial advisor to handle the sale of $700,000 in bonds approved recently by the voters to underwrite the cost of the construction; approved bids for two new buses; approved a resolution for the annual school election and heard a number of reports.

According to the schedule for construction of the addition to the high school, an application will be filed with the Michigan Financial Commission this month for permission to sell the bonds. This will take up to six weeks. Bids on the bonds will be received by July 22, the bonds sold by mid-August; the architects, Manson, Jackson and Kane will authorize advertising for bids in late September; bids for construction will be received by Oct. 22; bids will be let Oct. 29 and construction will begin in early November. Completion is scheduled for September 1980.

Supt. Gordon W. VanWieren said that every effort will be made to move the schedule along as fast as possible. The above is only a tentative schedule.

The firm of Stauder Barch and Associates located in Ann Arbor was named as financial advisor for the sale of the bonds for the new addition. The firm's has assisted 111 area schools including Boyne City, East Jordan and Petoskey in the sale of bonds for school building projects.

The firm's fee for assisting the board in the sale of the bonds is a flat $4,000 those present at the meeting were advised.

The board approved a resolution regarding the annual school election schedule for May, June 11. At that time, the voters of the school district will elect one trustee for a four year term and another for an unexpired three year term. Charles A. Elzinga will be a candidate to succeed himself for the four year term. Dennis W. Kusina and Elaine Martin are candidates for the unexpired term of three years. Any other issues to be brought before the voters will also appear on the allot.

Bids for buses were presented for consideration. The bid for two bodies submitted by the Carpenter Co. headquartered in southern Michigan in the amount of $8,530 each was accepted. The body allows 38¼ inches between the seats which affords more comfort for high school students and any adults using the bus. Four bids ranging from the Carpenter Company's low bid to $9,264 were received.

There was a lengthy discussion resulted before a decision regarding the purchase of chassis was approved. Bud Heeres, fleet supervisor, advised the purchase of an International because, he said, quality-wise they are a better buy and "because we need something dependable." Lower bids on other type chassis were by-passed and the bid given to Bryce Barnes of Eastport whose bid was $10,650 for one or $21,300 for two. The purchase was approved by a vote of four to two with one member absent. The nay votes were cast by Ardeth Wieland and Elzinga. The bids ranged from $21,000 to $28,750.

A request by a student for an early graduation so she could accept a full time job was denied. The student, without first seeking permission from the board, which is the approved policy, took classes at North Central Michigan College before obtaining board approval.

In other action, the board granted permission to the Charlevoix Band Boosters to sue a bus to transport the marching band to Holland for the Tulip Festival where the band will perform. The Band Boosters will reimburse the board for the use of the busy by late July. Mrs. Vincent Olach, who made the request in behalf of the Band Boosters, said. The Band Boosters have raised enough money to finance one bus.

Mrs. Connie Ford, forensics coach, was granted permission to take students to the Pentathalon in Ann Arbor and to the spring tournament at Traverse City later this spring.

The resignation of Mrs. Jean Loper as study hall supervisor, effective at the close of the school year, was accepted with regret.

Supt. VanWieren reported on his recent meeting with representatives of Consumers Power Co. which operates the Big Rock Nuclear plant near Charlevoix. He said his chief concern was the evacuation of students in the event of a nuclear accident. The issue was discussed at length. He said a plan was necessary. A seminar relating to this is planned for May 16 under the sponsorship of the Charlevoix County Civil Defense director. It will involve representatives from each school including an administrator, a teacher and a third person named by the school. Details of an evacuation plan and other issues will be worked out at the seminar.

Jim Jinsky, Industrial Arts instructor at the high school, reported on the recent regional Industrial Arts Fair and the State Industrial Arts Fair which were held in Traverse City. It marked the first time a state fair had been held in northern Michigan. Jinsky said the fairs went well and that Charlevoix students had scored well in the events. (The results were announced earlier).

Karen Peek of the Char-Em Intermediate School District where she works with the gifted/talented program spoke briefly about the program and then introduced Barbara Christensen of the Elementary school who introduced the program in the Charlevoix schools and Mrs. Lucile Martin who has been working with these students who are now in the sixth grade. All spoke on the merits of the program and what it has accomplished.

In conclusion, a copy of a proposed resolution regarding the program was presented to the board for study prior to taking action on the proposal at a later date. In essence, the resolution supports the concept that it is the responsibility of edueators to recognize and develop the special gifts each child might have.

Mrs. Peck commended the board for pioneering this program in the school.

The next meeting of the board was set for May 21.

Help curb costs

It's encouraging to note that the Charlevoix Area Hospital was able to keep its costs increases below the national average in the past year.

It's encouraging because a) there is an increased demand for hospital services and b) advances in medical technology have provided more services and thus a need for more personnel.

This week is National Hospital Week. And hospital officials are making a concerted effort to convince the public that "high health care costs are everybody's business."

How can you help curb health care costs?

Basically there are two ways:

Stay Healthy - Keep yourself physically fit, eat nutritious foods, cut out smoking, moderate your drinking, learn about accident prevention, have your children immunized against contagious diseases, follow your physician's advice and do not hesitate to ask questions.

Learn to use your hospital approriately - Make hospital stay as short as possible, take advantage of outpatient surgery when possible, have needed tests done before hospital admission, do not seek needless convalescent days in the hospital bed, seek treatment for routine problems in your doctor's office and not in the emergency room, be sure your insurance doesn't duplicate coverage and encourage policies that cover outpatient care, and read and try to understand your hospital bill and doctor's bill (question things you don't understand).

In particular, though, check to see if your insurance covers outpatient care. A lot of policies only cover care received in a hospital and they don't cover the same care when it is received in some other setting.

Inpatient care is the most expensive form of health care available. Outpatient care is an alternative. But to encourage outpatient care, insurance coverage must change.

Your Opinion

Nuclear power safer than most other energy sources

Editor:

Is our concern misdirected?

Citizens concerned about nuclear energy are expressing their concern about the hazards involved in a multitude of ways: civil suits, court injunctions, protests, as dissident shareholders, etc. There can be no question that such actions serve to increase costs to the consumer. the question is: "Are such additional costs justified?" If so, we all owe our thanks to these dedicated people and will support them by paying higher costs for power, significantly higher inflation, and probably ultimately, doing without many "conveniences."

If they are not justifed, we still will pay that price; but in the final analysis, for nothing.

If their concern is solely safety, it is seriously flawed. The alarming fact is that their actions, if successful in reducing nuclear power generation, is absolutely bound to increase the number of deaths directly attributable to power generation.

There are historical and continuing losses of life associated with power generation that can be measured; and can, with reasonable certainty, be expected to continue ... with coal, oil, and natural gas fuels the minimum number of deaths for a specified energy output can be accurately predicted. The maximum is less predictible and more subject to interpretation. (Is the death of a miner at age 60 due to black lung attributable to power generation?)

There is sufficient data available on solar, wind, or nuclear fuel associated deaths to as accurately predict the minimum number of deaths for each fuel (for example, based on present data, minimum deaths related to nuclear fuels would closely approximate the much publicized "zero").

We can, however, use the "worst condition"; the sum of theoretical casualties resulting from fuel sourcing, refining and processing, transportation, generation, accident or catastrophy, spent fuel or waste removal, transportation and disposal.

The alarming fact is that the "worst case" estimated deaths, using nuclear fuel at 15 is significantly less than the "best case" 50 using coal as the fuel. Thus, if our concerned citizens are successful in converting the specific amount of energy produced by nuclear to produced by coal we can be reasonably certain the net result will be at least 35 additional deaths, with the strong probability that the additional deaths will number in the hundreds (the "worst case" for coal as the fuel is 1,600 deaths).

There are a series of new reports, now due for publication, that further examine the expected risk factors of various fuels. Some of these, such as a current U.S. Government report that will predict 2,000 deaths due to nuclear fuels over the next 25 years, appear at first glance to be a condemnation for such fuels. Such reports must be compared at least with known "Best Case" risks with coal and oil. For example, that report includes fatalities from sourcing to waste disposal. Coal, in the mines alone, averages close to 100 "sudden" deaths per year, not including work related fatalities and will, in this one area alone, exceed the 2,000 deaths predicted for the entire nuclear fuel cycle.

Are we really ready to greatly increase all consumer costs - while simultaneously condeming many of our fellow citizens to coal or oil related deaths? If so, in the name of what noble cause?

Sincerely,
Josh Barnes

1) The only alternative is to have the costs borne by others. Government, business or inflation – but every cost applied to either of these is ultimately a cost to either the specific consumer or to the public in general.

2) The cost of power is directly reflected in 46% of the products or services we buy, it is indirectly reflected in all.

3) The only exceptions would be :

1. If all additional and replacement power generation used natural gas as a fuel.
2. If no additional or replacement power generation were implemented.
3. A combination of these two.

4) Report on Relative Risks of Energy Sources, Dr. Herber Inhaber (physicist, Associate Scientific Advisor to Canada's Atomic Energy Control Board).

Dr. Inhaber's current estimated range of deaths for 10 GWY energy output:

Coal	50-1600
Oil	20-1400
Wind	120-230
Solar	80-90
Uranium	2½-15
Natural Gas	1-4

Living beyond our means

The businessmen and government leaders of American should hang their heads in shame for what they have allowed to happen to the young people of America.

–Because Jimmy Carter lacks the guts to talk turkey to big labor and government about wage, price and profit controls;

–Because Joe Businessman marks up his merchandise beyond a fair return on his money beeause he knows he has us over a barrel;

–Because lending institutions are charging more than they really need to secure a fair return on their money;

–Because Mr. Farmer is attempting to fight a bad inferiority complex with a dose of high profits;

–Because Mr. Bloodandthunder, president of the local union, has staked his reputation on squeezing another nickel out of management;

–Because Mr. Driver is willing to pay $1 a gallon for gasoline without swallowing his carburetor;

–Because Mrs. Housewife coughs up $1 a head for lettuce and $4.99 a pound for beefsteak without swooning;

–Because Mr. Skilled Tradesman demands outlandish fees for his services;

–Because all of us insist on living well beyond our means;

We have made it literally impossible for a young fellow today to pick out his bride, get niarried, buy a house and start producing the grandchildren that make the whole business of living worthwhile.

In this inflation-mad world, a new medium-priced home today costs somewhere in the neighborhood of $60,000. This is a modest dwelling at best, with two or three bedrooms, a bath-and-a-half, a kitchen and a combination living room-dining room. It's probably a lot like the house you grew up in – nothing fancy, but adequate.

But unless a young fellow today has a bundle of "family money" behind him, that home is clearly beyond his means - unless he and his new bride decide to spend the rest of their lives in gainful employment, forfeiting forever the luxury of raising a family.

Of course, many young people today opt for this life style, whether they have to or not. But other young couples would like to start families, if they could only afford the interruption in the wife's salary demanded by pregnancy, childbirth and post-natal care.

When you are paying anywhere from $4,500 to $6,000 a year in interest on a home mortgage – not to mention principle, furnishings and utilities – any interruption in regular income can prove fatal.

What is the solution to the 13 percent annual inflation rate that has snared America?

Sadly enough, there is very little the average man can do now, according to the experts. President Carter could get a grip on the situation by imposing strict wage, price and profit controls, but this is something he says he will not do.

The alternative is a economic crash that could well prove fatal to the American system of government.

We have bequeathed to our children an economic headache of monstrous proportions. Perhaps it is just as well there will be no grandchildren to share the suffering.

Bourne again

WASHINGTON – Dr. Peter G. Bourne, President Carter's advisor on health and drug abuse, until he abused a physician's privilege himself, seems to have landed on his feet again. With State Department blessing and White House approval, he has been hired by the United Nations to head a major program dealing with water conservation.

It must be remembered that last summer Dr. Bourne was forced by the press to confess that he had used a fake patient name when writing a prescription for Quaalude pills to be used by a young, female assistant supposedly suffering from sleeplessness.

Now Quaalude pills are deemed a "controlled" drug, dangerous if abused. Since Dr. Bourne, invested with the nation's top responsibility of stopping drug abuse, was not personal physician to the young woman, and used deception so she could get these potent pills, it was clear that he violated professional ethics and might have committed a felony as well.

Bourne, a close friend of President Carter's, decided to ride out the storm, until it was alleged – from several sources – that he smoked marijuana and sniffed cocaine at a party given by the National Organization for Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML). Bourne had just given the keynote speech at NORML's convention.

Bourne was now a deep embarrassment to Carter, already mortified over Bert Lance, so the good doctor (he is a psychiatrist) resigned. On the way out the door, however, Dr. Bourne apparently told the New York Times there was a "high incidence" of pot smoking and "occasional" cocaine snorting by White House staffers. Tsk, tsk.

This sensational development caused all manner of Administration foes to cut loose at the Carter White House. After all, Bourne had once predicted that herion would be decriminalized and clearly favored decriminalization of lesser recreational drugs. Carter was forced to warn White House employees to obey drug laws "or to seek employment elsewhere."

Rep. Henry J. Hyde (R-Ill.) then wrote Attorney General Griffin B. Bell, urging him to investigate Dr. Bourne's claim that White House staffers had used illegal drugs. Deputy Attorney General Ben Civiletti more than two months later wrote Hyde that a Justice official asked Dr. Bourne whether he had made the statement reported in the Times, that Dr. Bourne denied it, and further stated he didn't know whether White House staffers had used drugs, as described. Therefore, wrote Civiletti, the Criminal Division decided no criminal investigation of Dr. Bourne was warranted, amen.

The Justice Department also heard from a group calling itself "The American Citizens for Honesty in Government" wanting to know, in effect, how come Dr. Bourne wasn't being investigated by a grand jury as other citizens would be, if charged with similar allegations. After months of contentions exchanges, the activist group was finally informed by the U.S. Attorney that a Grand Jury had "concluded not to proceed further" with the matter.

Meanwhile, with Dr. Bourne out of power, those favoring liberalization of laws dealing with recreational drugs dragged up stories about Bourne's two-faced behavior. Pot-users were furious that Bourne had befriended NORML but also backed the Mexican program of spraying marijuana with toxic pesticides. Inquiry magazine accused Dr. Bourne of hypocrisy, and concluded that he was screaming: "I make drug laws, and I break drug laws. You peasants obey them."

Well, Dr. Bourne dropped out of sight for a time until it was disclosed last week that the U.N. Development Fund had given him a two-year contract ($40,000 a year) to help plan a major water development and conservation program.

A State Department official told me that Dr. Bourne got the job after State recommended him and several others to the U.N., and that Hamilton Jordan's office in the White House provided clearance on Dr. Bourne.

Though Dr. Bourne's wife, Mary King, is paid $50,000 a year as deputy director of the much-criticized agency, ACTION, he should have the opportunity to earn a living and use his skills.

But isn't it a bit awkward, if not foolish, for the Carter White House to provide even small help in getting him yet another public job?

The man is lucky he didn't get hit with criminal charges. He certainly betrayed the trust put in him by his friend, Jimmy Carter. Couldn't Dr. Bourne, a psychiatrist, practice his trade in this city which has more than its share of spaced-out folk?

Points to consider before opening nuclear doors

The other day I read a letter to the editor written by a fellow who started out by saying, "If the group of protesters at Midland on April 21 had been composed of engineers, physicists, nuclear scientists and physicians, the public may well have paid more attention to the demonstration."

These scientists, who this fellow was referring to, have been too busy "being in control of the situation", or, at least, they thought they were in control, and most of us thought they were in control, until the "unexpected" – happened.

When you're in control of something, or you think you are, you're not out in the street marching and chanting, trying to get someone to listen to you. You're inside, rushing around, trying to get things back under control. Things that you thought that you knew all about, and then, the "unexpected" – happened, and spoiled all your nicely laid out plans.

Now, when you're living right next door to this scientist guy, while he's in there trying to figure out where the hot thing is that he dropped, and what he's going to do about it when he finds it, you get downright uncomfortable. After a while, the manager of the plant comes out, and says a few words into the mike. He assures you that the great scientist has got things cooled down in there, and "Everything is going to be OK, now."

Well, what if, after a while, and a number of these "unexpected" happenings, you just don't believe that manager or that scientist anymore? What if, you tell them so, and no one seems to listen? These scientific people, and the managers of these nuclear plants, who are in control, or think they are, just tell us to go home and quit worrying. They're too busy, too impatient to listen to us guys living next door. We don't know what's good for us anyway. And, as the fellow said in his article we're "hardly qualified to be making decisions about the future of Michigan's energy supplies."

Well, what if we do go home, but we can't stop worrying? We start thinking, instead, about the situation we're in, living upwind, or downwind from the scientific fellow while he's in there tightening and caulking things up? We'll probably move on from being uncomfortable, to being nervous, agitated, and pretty soon we're really frustrated, and mad. That's where the chanting and marching comes in!

Why are you pro-nuclear people so impatient to "get right back in there", rather then putting a hold on things? Give these great scientific minds a chance to re-think, re-plan, and re-train their operators.

How about, before we consider opening those nuclear doors again, following up on some of the ideas that we people, sitting out here a couple of miles downwind, think are pretty good things to look into:

- Training the nuclear utility operators the same way the Navy submarine people train their operators.
- Putting our nuclear waste in safe places, before we create more of it. Can we store it in salt mines, as some have suggested?
- Can we put this nuclear waste on a rocket, and shoot it to the sun, or some other nearby planet?

Now, my wife and I own a cottage about a mile or so from one of these nuclear spheres. My friends and I have often walked up there to admire it, and warm our feet in the waters coming from it. We've been readying ourselves to retire there.

So, finally, Mr. Scientist, and Mr. Utility Manager, if you can't convince me that you've got things under control this time, and we, your neighbors, don't have to go live in a tent somewhere the next time you drop something hot out there in your "Nuclear Sphere". To heck with this marching and chanting, I think I'll pitch my tent right in your driveway until you do convince me!

The latest popular movement – Sunset legislation

Like clothes, cars and cosmetics, there are such things as fashionable movements in government as well. Sunset legislation is one of the latest popular movements, and one which I think deserves special attention.

To date, 29 states have enacted laws calling for regular, periodic reviews of the operations of state agencies. In Washington, the Congress is considering a number of proposals along these lines.

The term "sunset" is derived from the fact that many agencies go along year-in and year-out without anyone in the Legislature or elsewhere examining whether the agency is still useful. The idea that those agencies which are no longer needed ought to expire, or have the "sun set" on their existence.

In Lansing there are currently two major proposals which will be debated during this term of Legislature. One, introduced by Sen. Gary Corbin and in identical form in the House by the Majority Leader, Joe Forbes, calls for a review of each department of state government. The other, of which I am the first co-sponsor, was introduced by my Republican colleague, Rep. Paul Hillegonds. As you may know, Rep. Hillegonds is originally from the Holland area and represents that district, but for several years served as Administrative Assistant in Washington for our former Congressman, Phil Ruppe.

His proposal also includes the review process, but in addition, it sets termination dates for the expiration of each state department. If the Legislature fails to renew the department's lease on life, so to speak, the department would cease to exist. In my view, this plan is far more effective than that offered by the majority party.

Realistically, the Legislature will simply not do the thorough analysis of each department's operations and the many agencies within each department unless they are forced to do so. The termination dates in our sunset bill forces the legislature to confront the fact that a major department will go out of business unless action is taken to continue it.

The Corbin-Forbes plan offers no such incentive. If, after review of the agency is completed by a special committee, the Legislature does not act, the department would continue to operate as it has in the past. I think you will agree that such an arrangement provides no motivation for the various bureau and department administrators to get serious about justifying their functions and operations.

Secondly, the Hillegonds-Andrews procedure so that both the Legislature and the departments can become accustomed to a new way of doing business. A joint committee of the House and Senate last year studied sunset legislation in other states, and recognized that problems arise when a wholesale review of all departments is undertaken almost simultaneously, as this had been the experience in 28 other states. Because of this, many of the goals of sunset were not reached.

Under our bill, the first review would not start until six years after the law is enacted. Then, two departments would be reviewed by the legislature each year. The measure also calls for the review process to begin 18 months before the agency or department is scheduled to expire.

Finally, one telling point has surfaced so far, in that a number of agencies have reviewed the bill and have come out in opposition. Some experienced observers in Lansing have said that this may be the best recommendation the bill could have. If the departments oppose the bill, then it indeed may represent an effective method for making these agencies accountable to the citizens, who finance their operations, by making their existence subject to review by the elected representatives of the people.

WE NEED GAS TO PROSPER

I am very pleased that two components of President Carter's energy plan are running into trouble in Washington, namely the proposals for gasoline rationing and Sunday gas station closings.

As I'm sure you realize, the Sunday closings would have a devastating effect on the economy of Northern Michigan, since so much of our economy depends on the tourist industry. In fact, an estimated 35,000 establishments in Michigan are directly connected with travel and tourism. Tourism is the second largest industry in Michigan, and generates more money for our state's economy than in all but four other states in America.

I am convinced that limiting travel for recreational purposes by rationing gas and/or closing gas stations on Sundays is not the way to encourage the pubbe to consider conservation in a positivc bght, especially if it results in elusing of businesses and loss of employment, as it no doubt would in Northern Michigan.

An invitation to seniors

Senior Power Day is almost here again. It will take place on May 15 in Lansing. Hundreds of senior citizens from across the state will come to tell the Legislature their concerns, and I personally invite seniors from northern Michigan to attend.

It is somewhat said and shocking to note that many of the problems confronting the elderly five years ago, when Senior Power Day began, are still around today. In some cases, problems like inflation have worsened.

Inflation devastates the elderly more so than any other sector of the population. The reason is most senior citizens live on fixed incomes made up of small pensions and social security. Even Medicaid and Medicare benefits have not kept pace because medical costs continue to escalate.

I expect the senior citizens to tell the Legislature this year that more must be done to help them lead dignified lives. The elderly of Michigan are not looking for a handout but a helping hand.

Because I have such an interest in what happens to our seniors, it is with great happiness that I accepted the vice-chairmanship of the Joint Legislative Committee on Aging. I am following in the footsteps of a legislator who did much to help the senior citizens in Michigan.

Former State Sen. Joseph Snyder established the Joint Special Committee on Aging in 1975. That was the first time in Michigan history that a Committee of Legislators was established to undertake an in-depth study of the problems facing the state's elderly.

Since that time there has been an ongoing process of reviewing and recommending the Legislature, by the committee, of areas in need of legislation or policy to alleviate identified problems. I fully intend to continue that process with vigor.

Of course, we will get a lot of input from the elderly on Senior Power Day. On that occasion, they will present their platform of needed legislation and from that base we expect to begin a legislative campaign to help improve their situation.

We in the Legislature must be looking ahead, not just to the immediate future and needs of the seniors but also the long range outlook. It has been noted by everyone from futurologists to economists that there are certain areas where tremendous growth is expected to take place in the next twenty years.

Three out of the five areas of growth most often cited relate to the elderly. The growth areas listed include care for the elderly, leisure-time activities and supportive health services.

With the number of people 65 and over doubling by the year 2000, there will be an ever growing need to improve and update the benefits and services available to the aged.

Programs like home heating assistance, started in Michigan a couple of years ago, we mean a lot more in the future. This is why we are presently working to refine the program. We are attempting to eliminate some of the bureaucratic red tape of the past programs and provide for a greater number of people.

Obviously, there are many more problems in addition to home heating assistance the Legislature will be tackling. I only hope we can address the most serious problems before they become untenable for our senior citizens. We will certainly try to make it a better world for our elderly so they can fully enjoy their golden years.

Mitch Irwin is the state senator in the 37th District.

Costly lifestyles

It's another one of life's greatest mysteries.

The moment your kids borrow something from you... it is never the same again.

I have a phonograph that I've had for years. OK, so it doesn't bounce the sound off of every wall, but I can hear Andy Wilbanns and Frank Sinatra on it well enough.

My kids used it at a party one night because it was plugged into the living room wall and every since then it rejects any record that isn't rock and there's only one volume level – the one that causes sterility.

It was the same with my hair dryer. They borrowed it and now it keeps blowing and drying even after the switch is turned off. As for my clothes, by the time they're returned, most of them are not recognizable. The sweaters are stretched, the colors faded, buttons and snaps have fallen off, and they have developed permastains for which there is no known cure.

The car is probably the worst. There is something contagious about a teenage driver for which a car has no antidote. The moment they climb inside and insert the key, the transmission goes into failure, tires turn bald, and the battery with two years left on a three-year guarantee goes dead. The gas tank turns to sponge, pointing the gauge to E when it hits the garage.

The list goes on and on. They return luggage with bent frames that will never close again, let alone lock... cameras which when focused make every subject look like a Rorschach test... binoculars that will never again enjoy the protection of lens caps.

You would think the theory would work in reverse, but it doesn't. A man in Highland Heights, Ohio, recently asked to borrow his daughter's baseball glove for a game with some friends.

She threw him the glove and added, "It's okay to use unless it's a hot, sweaty day. When it's hot and sweaty, the bubble gum which has been in the index finger for two years, runs down your finger and into your hand. If it bothers you, just pick at it with your teeth."

Whatya wanta bet when he picked all the gum off and the glove fell apart, his daughter said, "You've ruined my glove and now you'll have to buy me a new one."

Kids put quite a price on their lifestyle.

Andrews opposes gas ban

A Northern Michigan legislator announced today that he has sent a letter to both Michigan U.S. Senators in Washington urging them to vote against President Carter's request for authority to close gas stations on weekends.

In his letter to U.S. Senators Donald Riegle and Carl Levin, State Rep. Steve Andrews (R-Wolverine) wrote, "As you well know, businesses in my Northern Michigan district are heavily reliant on the tourist trade and would be devastated by the presidential edict closing gas stations on weekends."

Andrews encouraged the senators to heed the recommendations of the Senate Energy Committee, which recently voted not to grant the president standby authority, when the legislation comes up before the full Senate for a vote.

"A weekend closure would be doubly difficult for Northern Michigan to bear since the economic struggle there is a daily fight and the area is far from healthy," he continued. "Weekend closure of gas stations would thus penalize those who can least afford the resulting economic harm and job losses.

"If there are to be mandatory curtailments, then the hardship thus imposed should be shared by all Americans.

Hospital keeps cost increases below national guidelines, inflation

Charlevoix Area Hospital is celebrating National Hospital Week by announcing that in the past year it has been able to keep cost increases below national guidelines for hospitals, below the national average for hospitals, and below the national rate of inflation.

Charlevoix Area Hospital's costs have been held to an 8.2 per cent rate of increase in the past year. The national guidelines for hospitals is a 13 per cent increase. The average rate of hospital costs across the country has been 14 per cent. The national rate of inflation for the past year has averaged 10 per cent.

Richard Krueger said that on a monthly comparative basis, Charlevoix Area Hospital costs in 1978 were $182,400 and in 1979 were $197,500, an 8 per cent increase.

The theme of National Hospital Week celebrations across the country is named a "Voluntary Effort". As Krueger pointed out in a recent interview, this "Voluntary Effort" on the part of everyone at Charlevoix Area Hospital enabled the hospital to keep the lid on costs.

He attributes the success to several factors.

Charlevoix Area Hospital has been utilizing a group purchasing organizations enabling the hospital to purchase everything from surgical instruments to laboratory supplies at considerable savings.

"We buy intervenous solutions at 75 per cent off list price. Last year we were given a 25 per cent discount. We get 45 per cent off list price now on surgical instruments, and discounts from 20 to 55 per cent on laboratory supplies," he explained.

But, Krueger was equally anxious for the public to know what hospital employees have done.

"Our nurses will take time off, without pay, voluntarily, when their particular units are not busy. Or they fill-in in other departments that are busy.

Laboratory staff agreed to rearrange their shifts, creating a new 3 p.m. to 11 p.m. shift. Before the shift changes, the lab closed down at 5 p.m. and if lab work was needed someone had to be called back and paid overtime.

"As a result, despite a 7 per cent increase in lab salaries, our lab salary costs have remained nearly the same," Krueger said.

Many incalculable elements were involved in Charlevoix Area Hospital's ability to hold down costs. A new phone system was installed that simultaneously saved money and permitted phones in patient rooms. A new computer method of data processing for bills, accounts receivable and admissions has saved the hospital money. Jobs that were previously done by hand are being done by computer, thus freeing personnel to perform other jobs.

Dietary Department unintained the quality of the food served while holding down costs by joining a group purchasing plan, through the Michigan Hospital Association.

Krueger explained that holding down hospital costs are a constant struggle. Not only is the cost of many things a hospital must purchase rising faster than the annual rate of inflation, but there are constant changes in medical technology.

"The service we offer isn't the same today as it will be tomorrow," said Krueger. "We must strike a balance between technology and costs."

And Krueger continued, unlike a business, a hospital must keep going, 24 hours a day, ready for any eventuality.

"If we tell the world we have a Coronary Care Unit, we must be prepared for coronary care patients. The same is true for the emergency room. These two departments might not justify themselves economically, all the time, but we can't close them down," the administrator pointed out.

The administrator concluded by pointing out that the public can also contribute to holding down the rise of hospital costs.

As with every hospital in the nation Charlevoix Area Hospital is trying to keep the number of days a patient is in the hospital to a minimum. Patients must understand that not only is it best for them to get up and out of the hospital as soon as their doctor recommends, but it is a way of holding down costs.

Hospital officials also point out that too often people think because they have insurance they are getting free medical care. The overuse or misuse of insurance only contributes to increased costs for everyone.

Physicians at Charlevoix Area Hospital generally ask surgical patients to come to the hospital several days before admission, to receive pre-admission testing, as out-patients. This eliminates room costs while the tests are conducted.

Finally, but most importantly, we all have a responsibility to stay healthy ourselves. Smoking, alcohol and drug abuse are problems that lead to illness. Preventing illnesses not only saves dollars but saves lives.

The responsibility to stay physically fit is the individual's. Overweight, run down, unhealth people who must be hospitalized contribute to the increasing costs of health care, whether they pay directly or through rising insurance premiums.

During National Hospital Week, and all year, it takes a "Voluntary Effort" on everyone's part to contain health care costs. Charlevoix Area Hospital applauds its employees' "Voluntary Efforts" and asks the community to join them.

Contest gets underway

If you have noticed the posters around town talking about keeping health care costs down, they are part of a contest Charlevoix Area Hospital conducted to celebrate National Hospital Week.

Employees at the hospital were eligible to participate. The theme of the contest was holding down costs.

Cheryl Jacobs, Respiratory Therapy aid, won the contest with a poster, now displayed at the hospital, which urges fellow employees as follows: "Census Low, Take a Day Off and Enjoy the Wonderful Things We Never Have Time for — Save on Hospital Costs."

A special honorable mention was awarded to Danny Cox, the seven year old son of RN Mary Ann Cox, whose poster's slogan "Early Ambulation Gets you Home Faster", refers to the fact that time spent as a patient in the hospital is one of the most costly aspect of health care.

Judging and awarding the prizes were member of the hospital Board of Directors. Appropriately, Ms. Jacobs first prize was a pair of beach chairs.

Charlevoix's Symphony Band

High school bands receive II rating at state festival in T.C.

Charlevoix High School bands, participating in the State Festival sponsored by the Michigan School Band and Orchestra Association at Traverse City Saturday returned with II rating according to their director, Gary L. Stutzman.

The Symphony Band, playing in Class B which featured two of the finest bands in the state, received three II's in concert and another II in sight reading for a II rating. Stutzman said "I was pleased with the band. They played as well as they could. However, they followed Class A bands that were outstanding. It was a difficult act to follow."

The band is presently preparing for its trip to the Tulip Festival in Holland on May 19. The band and its flag corps will be participating in field competition as well as marching in the Tulip Festival parade.

The Concert Band, whose membership is composed of freshmen and a few sophoinores, received three II's in concert and a III in sight reading for a II rating. This group was competing with band from small schools whose members include upper classmen, Stutzman said. "Those extra years of maturity make a noticable difference. The youthfulness of our band was evident in their performance as compared with bands that featured ninth through twelth grade students. They did a good job. This was their first festival appearance. They will grow and learn" Stutzman added.

The concert band will join with bands from the middle school and the middle school choral group in a concert at the high school gymnasium May 10.

The Symphony band will present its final concert June 5.

Workshop designed to help people become directors of their own lives

"What kind of life do you want to be leading five years from now?"

"Would you like to cope more effectively with the stresses in your life?"

Those two questions are central to Charlevoix's CHIP Center's two May workshops.

Registration deadline for a three-session workshop entitled "Planning Your Own Lifestyle" is Wednesday, May 9.

The Lifestyle Planning workshop begins this Thursday, May 10, and continues May 17, and 24. Each session will be held at the Charlevoix Public Library from 7 to 10 p.m.

A two-session workshop on Stress begins Wednesday, May 16, with its second session on May 23, both running from 7 to 10 p.m.

To reguister for either workshop call the CHIP Center at 547-6551.

Both workshops are open to anyone in the area interested in the subjects, and both will be conducted jointly by CHIP counselors Oren Schroeder and Terry Smith. These are workshops in which people can sharpen their personal skills for dealing with everyday problems.

The Stress Workshop will emphasize methods of coping with the stresses of life, not eliminating stress itself.

As Schroeder, CHIP Center director pointed out, recently, "Stress has its biological effects.

"Our blood pressure increases, our heart beats faster, the air sacs in our lungs dilate to increase ventilation."

Participants in the Stress Workshop will learn to define their own levels of stress, how they respond, and techniques for coping with stress.

The Lifestyle Planning Workshop sessions are designed to help people become the directors of their own lives," Schroeder said.

People become rutted in a way of living before they know it," Schroeder explained.

"This workshop will take the time to assess where we are now, and where we are heading," he said.

The question will be asked, "Where do I want to be 5 years from now."

The participants will be able to assess personal goals and work on ways of achieving them.

"We will be helping people take stock of their lives and become masters of their own ships," Schroeder observed.

The counselor emphasized that both workshops are open to everyone.

A fee of $15 per person will be charged to cover expenses of the two-session stress workshop. The three-session Lifestyle Planning workshop is $25 per person.

For more information call Charlevoix 547-6551.

Members of the V.F.W. and the Auxiliary are asked to bring their rakes and cleaning supplies for an all-day work session. There will be a potluck lunch at noon. Members are asked to bring a dish to pass at the luncheon.

Plans were also announced for the weekly flea markets at the post home by Mrs. Keith Wagner. The flea markets will be held every Friday during the summer months beginning May 25. Anyone planning to display at the market are asked to call Mrs. Wagner at 547-9864 for reservations.

The annual Poppy Days will be held May 17 through 19. Members were asked to assist by working and by purchasing poppies.

In response to a request for volunteers to assist with a Life-line program being initiated by the Commission on Aging, those wishing to assist are asked to call Louise Pop at 547-6282. The Life-line features calls to shut-ins on a daily or part-time basis. The idea behind the program is to check on shut-ins who are living alone to make certain they are alright.

At the business session delegates and alternates to the State Convention in Kalamazoo June 10 were named. They are Mrs. Warner, Mrs. James Whitley and Mrs. Clarence F. Rabach, delegates, and Mrs. Clement Olach, Mrs. Thomas Hodgkinson and Mrs. Melvin Plum, alternates.

Members were asked to continue to save green slips from Glen's Market and caps from CocaCola company products which are redeemed for funds for the Auxiliary Cancer Fund.

A contribution of $50 was made to the Chamber of Commerce float presently being built.

Two new members, Mrs. Angeline Borths and Mrs. Martha Resch, were initiated at an impressive flag ceremony. Mrs. Edna Woodard was approved for membership. She will be initiated at a later date.

Cards were signed by members to be sent to members who are shut-ins, ill or elderly.

The family potluck supper planned for May 26 have been cancelled because of the Centennial and Memorial Day observances. More than 50 members and their families attended the recent potluck.

Real Estate Is A People Business And Ski & Shore Wants You To Know Its People

Meet Roger Shepard

"I apologize for the rough look, but several members of the Ski & Shore staff are preparing for Charlevoix's Centennial Celebration the end of this month." Roger enjoys being involved in Charlevoix activities. He is a member of the Lion's Club and is participating with other Lions Club members by growing a beard for the Re-enactment.

In 1961 Roger received a real estate license and managed a general insurance agency, and in 1968 he opened a general rental business, "which was a very demanding but interesting venture."

The Shepards had the desire to move north after spending considerable time vacationing in the Great Lakes area." We found our ideal building site on Lake Michigan the first day we were in Charlevoix, within a year we had re-located from Flint to Charlevoix and I joined the staff of Ski and Shore." Since then he has continued his real estate training by attending classes and seminars. "A year ago I took my Real Estate Broker's Exam and I am currently an Associate Broker with Ski & Shore."

Roger expects to become more involved with the Commercial/Investment area of real estate and finds that the selling of real estate allows him to give his customers the opportunity to enjoy Charlevoix as much as he does.

Roger lives in Clipperview with his wife, Priscilla, the beautician at Beverly Manor Nursing Home, and his two sons, Kevin (11) and Greg (7).

Hastings finishes 265th

Walter Hastings, pastor of the Community Church of God, came within five minutes of accomplishing a personal goal Saturday.

Hoping to finish the marathon in under three and half hours, Hastings fell just shy of his goal. He crossed the finish line in three hours and thirty-five minutes. Nearly 500 runners participated. Hastings finished in the middle-of-the-pack (265).

The pastor had been training for the race since Jan. 1. Not too long ago, he ran a 12.4 mile race at Kalamazoo.

Schurrer once did redecorating jobs for Al Capone

George Schurrer

Part III

By KATHERINE AMY

George Schurrer's knowledge of pigments gave him his first opportunity for job advancement. While he was washing cars, a large car was driven in to have its paint job retouched. The workman about to do it said that blue was blue and red was red and that was all there was to mixing paints.

Schurrer knew differently and said so. Since the big car belonged to an important customer, he was given the job of mixing the paint and sent to their paint shop to select his paint. He ordered cobalt pigment for enrichment of the blue pigment and waited two days to see if the color would change as the paint dried. It did not. Satisfied, he retouched the car. The owner was very pleased and offered Schurrer a job, leaving his business card. He was the president of American Electrical Company located at the corner of 64th and State Street. Schurrer's new job was assembling radio speakers at $18 a week.

Schurrer found the work very easy; he had become familiar with communication equipment while he was in the German Army. He assembled more speakers in a day than 12 others had done that same day. His good work did not go unnoticed; his pay check held $30 the second week. After work the fifth Saturday he was interviewed and told to take the next Monday off. This he was glad to do; it gave him an opportunity to look for work as an artist. But the fact that he still had a language barrier and the fact that winter is a bad time for fresco work made finding a job as an artist difficult. He went back to work assembling speakers Tuesday. A completely empty shop greeted him. The other workers had been fired.

In January 1926 when he was 29 years old, Schurrer began his career as an American artist. The Kolping Society, a club for unmarried professionals with chapters in both Germany and the U.S.A., found him a job repairing Holy Family statues at a convent in LaGrange, Ill. His pay was $100 a month, less than he had been paid as a speaker assembler, but at last he was doing art work. And in July, when the vice-president of Marshall Field saw his LaGrange work, he was sent to see Mr. Weber, then head of the decorator department for Marshall Field. At first he was put to work painting imitation marble and ceiling rosettes for the Masonic Temple. Each sample had to be approved by a member of the Eastern Star. Before he had finished this work, samples were no longer required, and he was put in charge of other workmen. Language was not considered a barrier; he could show the other artists what to do.

He worked successfully for Marshall Field for three years. His earlier dreams of professional recognition and a fat bank account came true. Then came America's depression, and again his bank account was gone.

Now there were only occasional repair jobs from Marshall Field customers, so he became a free lance artist, painting murals and doing restoration work for other rich customers. Three men with specialized jobs such as canvas-stretcher, taught by Schurrer, worked for him on these special jobs. Then he worked for Colonial Decorating Co. This was steady employment, but not steady pay. With $1800 owed him, by mutual agreement, he took over the business. He ran it successfully for two years; but he, too, found it difficult to collect payment for completed contracted work. In 1936 Schurrer again became a free lance artist.

During his years as an artist Schurrer met famous and influential people. While he was redecorating the Stevenson home he observed daily the young Adali Stevenson as he was playing and fighting, as young boys will, with his younger brothers Phelps and Bordon. (He again met him briefly years later when Adali was running for the U.S. Senate.) He talked three or four times a week to Mayor Thompson as he painted. At a personal cost of $12 million over six months the mayor helped Chicago teachers meet otherwise payless paydays. He often talked with Senator Leonardo, an Illinois senator whose home he was decorating. Leonardo was fascinated by the fact that Schurrer was at Verdun at the same time the senator's father was there. Leonardo also questioned him at length about the econoinic conditions of the post war Germany that Schurrer had left behind to become an American citizen.

Schurrer met the infamous as well as the famous. Marshall Field sent him to redecorate for Al Capone. He worked for him on three separate jobs over a three month period before he found out who his employer was. He knew only that he was an easy man to work for. Although all contracts were word-of-mouth, there was never any haggling about prices and all requested materials were supplied promptly. He talked to Capone many times, never saw him with a gun, and always found him to be courteous. He was told, by others, that Capone supported five soup kitchens in different areas of Chicago, feeding about 5,000 people daily. When Schurrer questioned him about the one at St. Columbanus, Capone admitted it, but said it was his mother's doing.

Also during his years as an artist Schurrer married. He was married July 26, 1941, when he was 45 years old.

More than once he might have married earlier, but the high society rich girls interested in the handsome young artist did not interest him. He wanted an accomplished woman for a wife, but he wanted her to be loyal and reliable. Over the many years as a steady Sunday dinner guest he had found just such a woman, but Madeline Tenne was not interested in marriage.

The pretty, strong-willed young Madeline was a Chicago schoolteacher, and she enjoyed being a Chicago schoolteacher. She was also a church organist and a vocalist with a lovely soprano voice, and she enjoyed being an organist and vocalist. She also enjoyed the company of the many family of guests her mother entertained. Why should she marry? Her mother Grace Tenne wondered, why not? She also wondered why Schurrer did not try to marry one or another of the other girls of German parentage that she knew he had met. But Schurrer told her that he knew what he wanted, and that as long as Madeline did not marry someone else, he would wait. And wait he did, for 12 years!

Editor's note: George Schurrer is a summer resident of Charlevoix. The first installment told about his unique home at North Point. The second installment told about his painting of cathedrals after World War I.

This is the cement home of George Schurrer at North Point.

Day of Renewal planned for May 12

The Charlevoix Area Christian Women, an interdenominational group of women, are sponsoring a second day of renewal on May 12 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. (bring a brown bag lunch) at the Charlevoix United Methodist Church, 106 State St., Charlevoix.

This is the second such day held in the Charlevoix area. The first meeting was held in October with Sister Margarita Jimanez as the featured speaker. The intent of the planning group is to afford women from many different denominations an opportunity to come together for praise and growth.

Mrs. Dorothy Belcher from Anderson, Ind., will be the speaker May 12. She has served on the State Board of Christian Education and has served as the State Spiritual Life Director for the women's work in her denomination. Mrs. Belcher is active as a retreat leader, speaker, and teacher. For the last eight years she has led Communication and Relationship Skill labs at the International Church of God Convention in Anderson, Ind. One of her most popular classes on parenting is entitled "Parents Listening So Teenagers Can Talk." She also leads conferences for ministers and their wives.

One of the things that Mrs. Belcher speaks to is the problem of fear in the modern age – "I am afraid I will lose my job. I am afraid I will not be accepted if I do what I choose. I am afraid I can't please God. I am afraid my husband or my wife will leave me for someone else. I am afraid my children will marry too young. I am afraid of being abandoned. I am afraid of life." To these modern voices of fear, Mrs. Belcher speaks a word of hope, of trust, of optimism. Gretzie Ames, along with other women from various area churches, will lead the worship part of the service.

Ostling supports volunteer programs

Rep. Ralph Ostling announced today his support for the volunteer services programs being offered in the 103rd district by the Department of Social Services.

"Last week, during National Volunteer Week, I had the opportunity to meet with volunteer coordinators and volunteers from my district who provide invaluable services to low income citizens in our community. It is gratifying to know that there are so many people willing to contribute their time and resources to help others in need of services," stated Ostling.

Ostling said that the concept of volunteer services ties in with the Republican philosophy of helping people help themselves. "We are now in an era of having to limit government spending, but it is important that we do not limit services to people who need them. By using volunteers, we are able to assure that both of these goals are met."

The Department of Social Services reports that during fiscal year 1977-78, 53,472 volunteers donated goods and hours of service valued at $26,736.00. The cost of this program to pay for the DSS employees who are volunteer coordinators and to reimburse volunteers for some of their travel and meal expenses was only $2.1 million.

Ostling continued, "There is no way that state government can afford to pay for all the services which many of our citizens need to assist them in daily living. The fact that so many people are willing to come to the aid of their neighbors or those less fortunate than themselves is truly remarkable. It is an uplifting experience to meet and talk with these volunteers."

"I am hoping that the Legislature will be able to devote some resources to provide the Department of Social Services with volunteer services coordinators in counties which do not have them. The return on our investment, both in terms of dollars and services provide, will certainly be worthwhile," Ostling concluded.

Anne Kelly

A quest for perfect love

A few days ago, I found one of those little religious leaflets stuffed between the storm door and the door frame. I always get the feeling that someone's trying to tell me something when that happens. "Repent or no mail today," perhaps. Maybe worse than that. It was from the proponents of the "Born Again" movement.

I have always been annoyed by religious propaganda of this sort which arrives at the door like the Penny Stretcher or Girl Scout cookies. Religion has always been a somewhat private commodity to me, and I don't like to see Salvation cheapened by selling it door to door. Nothing promotes religion like the example of a good moral life. I don't know if intimidation, slogans, gimmicks or "Dial in if you feel converted" T.V. shows accomplish their purpose or not. They probably just underline skepticism. The real stuff of Faith doesn't need a logo to march under.

after all. It's already got at least two: the Bible and/or for Christians, the Cross. And it's been progressing nicely for generations.

So it was, when for the sake of spiritual rejuvenation, I decided to choose a book highly recommended by several friends, that I invited into our home a publication that did more than any soap box sermon could have, for spreading the Message.

A Severe Mercy is a remarkable love story as well as a story of the commitment to faith by two loving and highly intelligent young people. If you have ever questioned Faith on the basis of substantial, evidence, you will appreciate the rational, almost scholarly approach of two relatively pagan lovers for the Truth.

Including 18 previously unpublished letters of C.S. Lewis who becomes close friend and confidant of the Vanaukens while in Oxford, A Severe Mercy is a quest for perfect love. When the two realize the price of that love is paid in suffering and loss, the meaning of faith comes through like an unwelcome visitor. There is little heroic saintliness to leave the reader unconvinced. There is much truly human grappling with and coming to terms with the bittersweetness of reality, and what it means for a human being to have to submit with courage and faith. And that's pretty convincing testimony.

Not "for Christians only", A Severe Mercy is also for those who have ever wondered about Faith: having it, losing it, keeping it. It is a book you can invite over and study in the privacy of your own home, no threats of damnation or displeasure with your present religious affiliation included. You won't find it in your door some morning. Better check at one of the bookstores.

A movie of tragedy

The true-life story of Corrie ten Boom, former Nazi prisoner, will be presented through the motion picture, The Hiding Place, on Monday, May 14, at 7:30 p.m. at the Cinema II Theatre.

This remarkable story of tragedy and violence shares the experiences of a family who was willing to risk all for others. The ten Booms became involved in the Dutch Underground during the German occupation of World War II by hiding Jews in a secret room built in their house, thereby aiding them in their escape from the Nazis. As a result of a raid by soldiers, Corrie's family was taken prisoner and Corrie was sent to the dreaded concentration camp Ravensbruck.

The Hiding Place portrays the dehumanizing agonies of a concentration camp ... the personal confusion and conflicts of both victors and vanquished ... the confrontation of military might and gentle ministry ... and the costs of caring for others.

Millions of readers have cried, suffered and triumphed with Corrie ten Boom and her family through the book The Hiding Place. Now a motion picture captures all the power, excitement and sheer dramatic force that sets this story apart from all others.

Shipping industry needs more officers

The Great Lakes shipping industry needs more young officers on its ships to navigate and run engine rooms.

A Lake Carriers' Association spokesman, pointing to the Great lakes officer requirement study just completed by Maritime Administration showing a need of 150 to 250 ships' officers a year over the next 10 years, said we are desperately short of officers. These are considered high paying jobs with "excellent" vacation and pension benefits in a stable industry and lead to positions of captain and chief engineers.

Steps are already under way to increase the supply source of both categories, he said. "We expect to obtain at least 50 percent of the average officer requirement of 200 officers from the Great Lakes Maritime Acudemy at Traverse City, presently a part of Northwestern Michigan Community College. One hundred officer graduates from that three-year school will require tripling its capacity with a corresponding expansion of its plant, instruction and administrative staff, as well as its recruiting and screening.

U-M offers courses for health professionals

The University of Michigan will offer three courses in Traverse City this spring and summer for nurses in the baccalaurate program: Pathophysiology (N235), Family and Community Health Nursing (N455); and Pharmacology and Therapeutics (Pharm. 210).

The pharmacology course which begins May 31 will be taught by Dr. Benedict Lucchesi, professor of Pharmacology and director of the Upjohn Center in Ann Arbor. Dr. Lucchesi who has been trained as both a pharmacologist and physician, is an expert on drugs which regulate and assist ailing hearts. Enrollment in the course is open to any interested health professional.

Family and Community Health Nursing is a ten-semester hour course to be taught by Professors Carol and Cheryl Easley of the U-M. It will meet at various sites including Traverse City, Kalkaska, and Charlevoix. Orientation for the course begins May 17 at Northwestern Michigan College.

Pathophysiology includes a series of lectures by physicians and clinical nurse specialists on diagnosis, assessment, therapeutic management and preventative care. Professor Lucy Brand of the U-M is the instructor-moderator. It begins on April 30 and is open to any registered nurse.

Students register for Pathophysiology on April 23-24 and for the other two courses on May 7-8 with Grace Geiger in the MSU office at Northwestern Michigan College. Call her at 946-7496 for further information about fees, registration, and meeting dates.

FAITH REVEALS THE GOOD THINGS ABOUT OUR YOUTH

Our most unfairly maligned age group is the one consisting of older children and teenagers. Because of the spectacular, headline-making antics of a very small minority, our young people are routinely suspected of everything from noise, insolent behavior and drug addiction to school vandalism and a willingness to knock an elderly woman to the ground for the few dollars in her handbag. In truth, the vast majority of our youth are friendly, respectful, enthusiastic, law abiding, hardworking students; intent only on learning to make their way in the world and perhaps improving it in the process. If your training and influence have been reinforced by family attendance at the Church of your choice, then YOUR children undoubtedly belong to this praiseworthy majority.

"The greatest reverence is due the young." —Decimus Junius Juvenal (circa 50-130 A.D.)

"Even a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure, and whether it be right" —Proverbs 20.11

Camp Daggett ready to open

Applications are now being accepted for boys and girls between the ages of 7-14 who are interested in attending Camp Daggett this summer.

Camp Daggett is located on Walloon Lake. The 10 cabin co-ed camp can accomodate up to 100 people. Applications are accepted on a first come first serve basis.

Seven camping sessions are scheduled for the summer: June 24-June 30, July 2- July 6 (Char-Em special session), July 8-July 14, July 15-July 28 (two week session), July 29-August 4, August 5- August 11, August 12- August 25 (two week session).

The camp director this year is Nancy Pierson. Her husband, Tim, was the director for the last three years. Jerry Donnelly returns as business manager. In addition, a staff of counselors and instructors has been assembled.

The youth camp stresses water skills. In a week's time, it's likely a young camper will go on hikes, go canoeing, sailing, boating, swimming (or taking swimming lessons), fishing and even try lifesaving.

Campers sleep on bunk beds. Each camper is responsible for his or her own bedding. Cabins are arranged by sex. Camper requests for friends to be in the same cabin must be made prior to registration. A nurse is on duty 24 hours a day.

Applications can be picked up at the Charlevoix Chamber of Commerce and at local banks.

Most of the youngsters attending the camping sessions are from Charlevoix and Emmet counties. Last year 83 percent of the campers were from those two counties. Anyone who attended Camp Daggett last year received a brochure in the mail outlining this year's program.

Camp Daggett was founded in 1925 as a camp for boys. The land for the camp was donated by Henry Daggett. It went co-ed in 1976. Camp Daggett is a non-profit organization governed by a 15 member Board of Trustees. The board is comprised of representatives from various service clubs. Charlevoix is represented by Ed Shanahan from the Kiwanis Club. Officers on the board include: Dick Lauterback, president (Walloon Lake Lions); Mike Hills, treasurer (Petoskey Kiwanis); Norma Einecker, secretary (Charlevoix County delegate at large); and Bob Brunmler, vice president (Petoskey Rotary).

If anyone has any questions contact Ed Shanahan at 547-2115.

Radiation

1974 by the EPA are "projected numbers of health effects attributable to release of certain long-lived radionuclides by normal operation of the nuclear power industry estimated as maximum plausible projections for purposes of planning for adequate public health and safety considerations" according to EPA charts.

Those figures, published in 1974, are for the United States and do not take into account other country's nuclear power plans. They may be necessarily dire for purposes of health and safety planning. Drake admitted, but, he pointed out, the estimates of exposure of the people around the Three Mile Island Plant keep rising each week.

Accompanied by his wife, Margaret, he has left for the west to assume his new position in Shelton, a community of approximately 10,000.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Ervin Ozga, he is a graduate of the Charlevoix High School and Lake Superior State College. He has been active in wrestling on high school and college levels. Since graduation, he has coached and officiated.

Mrs. Burkee installed president

Mrs. John Burkee was elected president of the Coast Guard Wives club at their regular meeting held Wednesday at the Burkee home. She succeeds Mrs. John Foster in the office.

Two tapped for Tower Guard

Ceremony and surprise marked the traditional May Morning Sing at Michigan State University, May 1, as 94 students were tapped for the distinguished honoraries, Tower Guard and Mortar Board.

Joan Cook and Ann Marie Kazyaka of Charlevoix were among those honored. Both students were tapped for Tower Guard.

Boommates and friends were responsible for delivering the unsuspecting new members to the 7 a.m. ceremony at Beaumont Tower where they were serenaded by the Men's Glee Club and given red carnations. Many parents and family members were on hand to witness the ceremony.

Tower Guard, a service honorary started in 1935, selects outstanding freshmen on the basis of high academic achievement, good character and a willingness to serve. Their main activity is to read and aid blind students at MSU.

Mortar Board, founded in 1918 and one of MSU's most prestigious honoraries, selects juniors and seniors who are committed to the ideals of scholarship, leadership and service to the community.

Once limited to women, both honnraries now admit men to their membership.

Ceremonies were followed by a breakfast in the Union.

Cook, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Cook, 520 Meadowlane, is a student in MSU's Lyman Briggs College, a residential college specializing in the sciences.

Kazyaka, a psychology major, is the daughter of Geraldine Watson, Charlevoix.

Both students are 1978 graduates of Charlevoix High School.

Kloosters join Albion fraternity

Bleha lecturing on economics

Thomas Bleha has left Boston to spend a week each in London, Paris, Bonn, Brussels and Amsterdam. He is one of three Americans - of an international group of 18 - who have been studying and lecturing at Harvard University for the past year on economic problems world-wide.

Bleha is a graduate of Charlevoix High School (1952) and the University of Michigan (1956). He is on loan this year from the State Department where he has served for 20 years in both the European and Far East theaters.

Bleha is the son of Mr. and Mrs. C.J. Bleha of Charlevoix.

Fifteen new homes started

Although some people are still not convinced that winter is over (based on Saturday's snow flurries), there are a few spring believers.

The Department of Building Inspection reports that permits for the construction of 15 new homes in Charlevoix County were issued in April. In addition, 12 partial permits (for basements) were issued.

Maybe spring is on the way.

Negligent homocide charge

He had appeared in Magistrate Court earlier and had been released on personal recognizance.

Wertman was the driver of a pick-up truck that struck a car driven by Mrs. Helms on U.S.-31 North during a snowstorm. Mrs. Helms died later at the Charlevoix Area Hospital as the result of the injuries. Wertman was hospitalized until recently at Little Traverse Hospital for treatment of injuries received in the accident.

Summer business should be good

By TOM DAMMANN
Special to the Courier

Summer vacation business promises to be as good this summer as it was last summer despite the threatened gasoline shortage.

This conelusion results from a telephone spot check of Chamber of Commerce officials, motel and resort operators and bankers in the northwest quadrant of the Lower Peninsula, as well as state officials in Lansing.

The area checked stretches from Traverse City to Mackinaw City and is labeled the prime tourist region of the state.

The opinions expressed indicated a cautious, somewhat jittery confidence.

"There is no doubt the entire tourist industry will be in jeopardy if the gasoline shortage proves to be uncontrollable," said Merle Lutz, executive director of the Petoskey Area Chamber of Commerce.

"There is a great deal of concern among business people, retailers and resort operators," Lutz continued. "This is largely attributable to the indecisive and contradictory statements by government and oil industry spokesman."

Nevertheless, Lutz is confident that measures already taken and planned by the state and tourist industry will assure a good summer "barring a real gasoline shortage."

Considerable referance was made to the gas shortage of 1974.

"We handled it then and learned a good deal doing so," says Louis Hollow, president of Charlevoix's First State Bank.

General relief was expressed throughout the state by the decision of the Service Station Dealers Association of Michigan not to join a national four day shutdown later this month to protest federal restrictions preventing dealers from passing increasing operating costs on their customers.

"Due to the adverse effect a 4-day shutdown would have, we hesitate to participate, despite the inequities of the situation," said Charles Shipley, association executive director. The association represents 33 percent of the dealers in the state.

Principle reason for confidence is that the tourist industry is so large and so vital to the state's economy, that the state government is going all out to cooperate with the industry to protect it and vice versa.

Called the travel industry, it includes vacation, pleasure, business and convention business.

According to Bruce McComb, deputy director of the State Travel Bureau in Lansing, the travel industry is second only to manufacturing in dollars and cents.

"In 1978 direct expenditures by travelers in Michigan totalled $4.7 billion, while the indirect receipts totalled another $3.6 billion for a grand total of $8.3 billion," he said.

Last Wednesday the Travel Bureau held one of a series of weekly meetings with State Energy Officials and representatives of the state's four regional tourist associations.

McComb reported that it was agreed to establish a central location for providing weekly reports to the public on the availability of gasoline in various areas of the state. The establishment of a hot line to this center is under consideration, as well as radio and TV spot announcements in the large metropolitan areas.

Triple A will beef up its information service to include gasoline supply status in neighboring states, McComb said.

These plans will be finalized at another meeting next Wednesday and will be publicized immediately throughout the state and the midwest.

"Our most critical problem is to maintain a balance between over-confidence and gloom," McComb said, "If we are too optimistic we may end up with a lot of strunded tourists. If we are too gloomy we may find ourselves in the situation we were in in 1973-74 when there was gas shortages in the urban areas while there was plenty in the tourist areas.

"Our only course is to keep the public informed as to the availability of fuel and where," McComb continued.

Some ski area operators recalled that in the 1973-74 crisis they made arrangements with local gas station operators to take turns staying open weekends and that they in turn passed fuel information on to their patrons. They will do this again this summer and next winter, if necessary.

According to a spokesperson (former Courier editor) Paula Holmes, Gov. Milliken is trying to avoid weekend closings, "It would be as a last resort, if at all," Holmes said.

Nuclear power: How much does it cost?

By SARA GAY OAMMANN
Special to the Courier

The economics of nuclear power are a numbers game.

Depending upon the source and the methods of measuring the costs of nuclear generation, nuclear power is either the most inexpensive source of energy today, or an economic disaster.

Consumers Power Company spokesmen announced April, 1979, that the total cost of electricity generated at Big Rock Point was 1.809 cents per kilowatt hour. They said that the Charlevoix plant had the lowest operating costs of all of Consumers' Plants, producing electricity at .958 cents per kilowatt hour, caiculating only fuel and production costs. The first figure, 1.809 cents per kilowatt hour represented total costs, they said.

Richard Dahlquist, Consumers regional manager compared those figures with an average cost nf 2.198 cents per kilowatt hour for Consumers' fossil fuel plants.

Critics of the nuclear industry say that those figures, which show nuclear generated electricity to be cheaper than fossil fuel electrient generation, are misleading.

Critics charge that these figures do not include the costs of storage of nuclear waste, the cost of decommissioning (shutting down the plant at the end of its life), nor the constantly changing costs involved with repairs and safety.

"The economics of coal and nuclear are close enough, that if the safety factors alone now shifted by an order of magnitude we'd certainly change our view that nuclear is cheaper," wrote economist Lewis J. Perl of National Economic Research Associates in the New York Times, recently.

In the immediate area surrounding Big Rock the cost of electriety for eonsumers is less expensive if the source is Consumers Power Company than if the source is Top O Michigan Rural Electric Company which relies on fossil fuels.

A household using 900 kilowatt hours in a month would pay approximately $40 to Consumers Power and about $50 to Top O'Michigan for the same 900 kilowatts.

But applications for Consumers Power Company rate hikes are under consideration by the Michigan Public Service Commission.

And Top O Michigan is in the process of acquiring 20 percent interest in Oetroit Edison's Fermi 2 plant.

Both these moves are subjects of serious controversy. The question of Top O Michigan's involvement with Fermi 2 is before the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) because, in violation of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, there was no citizen participation in this move, according to Mary Sinclair, vice president of the Great Lakes Energy Alliance, an outspoken critic of nuclear power.

One of the major contentions of critics of the industry is that simple figures on the cost of electrical generation do not include the unforseen costs that occur in a nuclear power plant.

Nuclear Power plants do not operate continuously. They must be shutdown annually, at the very least, for maintenance and refueling.

But fossil fuel plants, too, must undergo periodic maintenance. Generally the whole plant is not shutdown at once, but repaired unit by unit on an alternating basis. Currently the Advance Plant of Northern Michigan Electric Cooperative has a major unit down because of a damaged shaft in a turbine. Company officials hope it will be repaired by September, but it could take as long as two years, according to Clyde Johnson, company general manager.

Big Rock established a record for continuous operation when it ran for 342 days from August 13, 1976 to July 22, 1977.

Before and since Big Rock has been shutdown many times, for reasons ranging from fuel failures in its early years, to radiation traces forcing a shutdown in 1973, to the most recent shutdown which began as a routine maintenance operation. Then the shutdown continued with work on a core cooling system that took longer than expected to install because of problems in its construction. The celebrated leak followed and finally the potentially dangerous rattle in the reactor core caused by a loose deflector plate was discovered.

Consumers Power Company officials announced that the recent closures at Big Rock would cost the company $30,000 a day.

Fred Buckman, director of Nuclear Activities for Consumers Power amplified saying that the $30,000 per day represents the difference in costs between nuclear generation and the electricty Consumers must now buy to make up for the loss of Big Rock, a 75 megawatt plant.

The closure of the 25 megawatt unit at Northern Michigan's coal-fired plant will cost that company about $7,500 a day, according to Johnson.

According to Buckman, the $30,000 per day figure does not include the cost of the repairs at Big Rock. "We do not know what the costs of those repairs will be," he said.

Asked how that would effect the figures on Big Rock's economic generation of electricity, Buckman said, "This year, those figures are likely to be high if you spread the cost over the generation – kilowatt hours."

Asked how to figure the cost of decommissiomng a plant into the economics of nuclear power, Buckman said:

"Consumers has looked at decommissioning and we estimate decommissioning will cost about 5 percent of the original construction costs.

"But you can't talk about it in terms of the cost of the dollar when the plant was built," Buckman continued. "If Big Rock were to be decommissioned in 2020 we'd have to talk about it in terms of 2020 dollars.

According to Consumers' figures, Big Rock cost somewhere between $25 million and $27.7 million in 1962. (Company figures vary depending upon the source). Translating $27.7 million in 1962 to 2020 would involve factoring in at least the annual rate of inflation.

The annual rate of inflation since 1962 has been over 10 percent, but using 10 percent to be conservative, a $25 million plant in 1962 would cost at least $145 million in 2020.

Oecommissioning involves shutting down the facility, removing some equipment, maintaining strict security around the area for at least 30 years, then dismantling what was left, as Buckman explained.

Of more immediate concern to economists, however, is the general problem of the spiraling costs of nuclear power, and the question of who is going to pay.

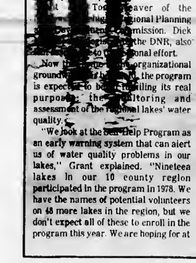
Is quality of Lake Charlevoix deteriorating?



Despite the long delayed advent of spring, some lake associations and [illegible] will soon be [illegible] in a plan designed to assess the water quality and effect of the process in many of the [illegible] lakes.

The [illegible]f-Watershed Water Quality Monitoring Program is established in 1974 as a cooperative project between the Inland Lakes Management Unit of the Department of Natural Resources (DNR) and concerned lake associations and [illegible] property owners.

Now [illegible] ground[illegible] the program is expected to be [illegible] willing its real purpose, the monitoring and assessment of the regional lakes' water quality.

"We look at the Self-Help Program as an early warning system that can alert us of water quality problems in our lakes," Grant explained. "Nineteen lakes in our 10 county region participated in the program in 1978. We have the names of potential volunteers on 48 more lakes in the region, but we don't expect all of these to enroll in the program this year. We are hoping for at least 25 additional lakes this year, already [illegible] others."

Volunteers [illegible] in two groups, the South Arm and the North Arm. Grant said tests show the central basin has better water quality than the South Arm.

Walloon Lake was rated mesotrophic in 1977.

The only lakes monitored in Emmet County have been Crooked Lake and Pickerel Lake. Both rated mesotrophic last year. Grant said they will be tested again this year but that no other lakes in the county will be - at least "not that we know about at this time."

Most of the lakes that will be monitored for the first time are in the southern part of the region (Grand Traverse, Wexford and Missaukee counties), Grant said.

Recognition of the need to safeguard the state's fragile water resources from the encroachment of mankind gave the program its impetus. While it is natural for lakes to mature, the increase in the population and the activities of man have accelerated the process of dumping nutrients into lake waters. These nutrients, nitrogen and phosphorus, provide a rich diet for the algae and other plant life in lakes and trigger their uncontrolled growth.

"The result is a gradual choking of the lake," Grant said. "As the aquatic plant life becomes more abundant and larger, sturdier plant life starts to take hold, the lake [illegible] cycle that may [illegible] complete autho[illegible] in a human [illegible] precious water resources [illegible] its time."

Participants in the Self-Help Water Quality Monitoring Program will play a large part in [illegible] the region's lakes. Grant said. From May through the middle of [illegible]ember, volunteers will take a few [illegible] of each week to measure [illegible] telltale factors in the process, the [illegible] the amount of algae [illegible] the water.

The data collected [illegible] are in the program [illegible] for study and comparison [illegible] year to year. Evidence of problems in an area [illegible] the lake from the accumulated information [illegible] DNR and the regional planning commission will analyze the causes (or causes) of the problems and work with a plan to eliminate them.

All of the region's 2,1[illegible] lakes and ponds are eligible to participate in the program although those in the developed or developing watersheds are of prime concern, Grant explained. Explanations concerning the necessary equipment, sampling procedures, and the enrollment process can be obtained by calling Grant or Tom Weaver at the regional planning offices (946-5922).

Residents to sound off on school system

Residents of the Charlevoix School Olstrict will have an opportunity to air their views about the Charlevoix School System during a telephone survey to be conducted this week.

The survey will be conducted on Thursday, Friday and Sunday, May 17, 18 and 20 by a crrps of volunteers from the Charlevoix Elementary School Parents group who will be calling approximately 400 randomly selected persons. These persons will be asked to prepare series of questions relating to the quality of the schools, sources of school information, educational goals and problems faeing the schools.

The survey, being conducted on the recommendation of the Professional Study Committee composed of board members, administrators and teachers, is designed to gain information that will help inprove the quality of education being offered in the district.

In other words, it is designed to measure what people in the school district think about their schools. The committee feels that the information obtained will enable it to plan an educational program that is consistent with the community desires.

The response from the interviews will be arranged and with accurately reflect the community opinion. A summary of the findings will then be published.

Speaking of the proposed survey, Supt. Gordon W. VanWieren said "The survey should give us a good reflection of what the community really thinks of this schools and what it expects of its schools. The information we gain will be put in good use. Therefore, I urge everyone who is contacted to respond. It is only through your cooperation that the survey will reflect your opinions."

Lake Land Real Estate

A large downpayment may have some advantages, depending on your personal financial situation. For one thing, the buyer may find it easier to obtain a loan. One may also be able to obtain a loan at a lesser rate of interest. Total interest. Total interest expense, of course, will be lower and the equity in the home greater. Statistics show that on a 25 year, 8 percent loan, every $1,000 of downpayment decreases the amount of total interest paid by about $1,310. If a large downpayment is possible, it may be a good way to buy. Check alternative uses of available capital, however.

Discuss your home financing problems with professional real estate personnel at the office of THOMAS REAL ESTATE, 100 Pine River Lane, 547-4494 and many times we can show you how a home of your own can be affordable now. Through our associations with many of the local financial institutions we can often help you obtain financing whether that will be VA, FHA or Conventional. "Do Business Where Business is Being Done". Open: Daily 9-5, Sundays and evenings by appointment.

Judge Noel Fox: State cannot regulate Indian fishing

BY TOM DAMMANN

The state is appealing the decision by Federal District Court Judge Noel P. Fox that commercial fishing by two Chippewa Indian bands cannot be regulated by the state because their unlimited fishing rights are guaranteed in two 19th Century treaties.

Simultaneously, Attorney General Frank J. Kelley warned that the state is duty-bound to enforce Judge Fox's ruling pending the outcome of the appeals.

There is confusion on whether or not Judge Fox's ruling applies to non-reservation Indians (including the 4,500 member Northern Michigan Ottawa Association) who outnumber reservation Indians by almost 10 to 1.

One side says they are not covered, but that Judge Fox is expected to rule on this following hearings on a motion to include them in the case.

Another side says the ruling is so broad that it includes all Indians and not just the two Upper Peninsula tribes.

It is thought that Judge Fox will delay a hearing on the application for an injunction against the state's enforcement of its fishing regulations on the Indians pending the appeal's outcome.

At press time, state officials were still determining a course of action, while sports fishermen screamed their disappointment and wrath over the decision because they contend that Indian gill netting is wiping lake trout out of Lake Michigan and will do the same in Lakes Huron and Superior which are covered in the decision.

Gov. William Milliken, who urged the appeal, announced that while the Fox decision must be reviewed by higher courts, the state and the Indians should continue their negotiations to reach an agreement on how and where Indian commercial fishermen may operate.

Arthur LeBlanc, Bay Mills Tribal chairman, telephoned Gov. Milliken Thursday night and said the tribes are willing to negotiate the extension of a temporary self-imposed ban against Indian fishing in Lake Michigan south of Good Hart beyond May 15.

Milliken said an assessment of fish populations in the Upper Great Lakes being conducted jointly by Indians, the Department of Natural Resources and the U.S. Bureau of Fisheries and Wildlife will continue.

There have been some violent incidents during the dispute which has been going on for almost 10 years, particularly in the Charlevoix area.

Because of the heating up of the atmosphere following Judge Fox's decision, Howard W. McKinney, Midwest Region Conciliator in the U.S. Department of Justice, came to the Traverse City-Charlevoix-Petoskey area to confer with local Indian leaders and sports fishermen, county prosecutors and law enforcement officials in an effort to prevent violence.

Milliken appealed to "all Michigan citizens to refrain from any overt acts which would jeopardize the personal safety of anyone.

"In the strongest possible terms, I would ask sports fishermen, commercial fishermen – Indians and non-Indians alike -- to avoid confrontations," Milliken said.

Fox's ruling was on a suit entitled "The United States of America et al vs. State of Michigan et al," filed six years ago in behalf of the Bay Mills Indian Community on Lake Superior's Whitefish Bay. Later the Sault Ste. Marie band of Chippewas were brought into the suit and the waters covered were extended to cover two-thirds of Lake Michigan, the upper third of Lake Huron, the St. Mary's River and Lake Superior from Sault Ste. Marie to Marquette.

In his 131 page decision, Judge Fox ruled that "the mere passage of time has not eroded, and cannot erode the rights guaranteed by solemn treaties that both sides pledged on their honor to uphold.

"The Indians have a right to fish today wherever fish are to be found...a right established by the Treaty of Ghent and the Treaty of 1836...That right...does not depend on state law."

The tribes have agreed to extend the ban for one more month.

PBS film crew

Re-enactment on TV

Lights... camera... action

The Public Broadcasting Station at Central Michigan University will present a half hour documentary on the re-enactment of the Battle of Pine River Thursday, May 24 at 7:30 p.m.

A camera crew from the station filmed the dress rehearsal last Tuesday afternoon and then spent Wednesday on Beaver Island interviewing Island residents.

The re-enactment will take place Saturday, May 26 in East Park. The historic battle between the Mormons and the Irish settlers is believed to be the only battle ever fought in the waters of Lake Michigan.

The re-enactment highlights the city's centennial celebration during Michigan Week. It was 100 years ago that Charlevoix became a chartered village.

Over 50 townspeople will take part in the dramatization which depicts the events leading up to the battle. The confrontation between the Mormon boats and the Irish settlers fishing fleet will be played out in the same waters in which it took place 125 years ago.

In the 1800's several thousand Mormons inhabited northern Michigan's Beaver Island and comprised the settlement of St. James which was the county seat of Charlevoix. Although the Islanders were officially United States citizens, a man who wielded more power than the president was James Strang...the King of the Mormons.

In 1853, Strang's empire began shrinking with many of the younger Mormons emigrating to the mainland settlement of Pine Island (now Charlevoix). It was at this time that Michigan passed a law that forbade the selling of alcohol to Indians. In Pine River, however, alcohol was used as money in the Irish settlers barter system to gain valuable pelts from the native trappers.

Strang, angered by this lawlessness and lack of allegiance, sent troops sailing from Beaver Island to arrest the captain of the Pine River settlement and bring him back to the county seat for trial.

When the Mormons arrived, the Irishmen confronted them and, history books recount, an Irish musket accidentally discharged. The Mormons, seeing this as an obvious act of aggression, fired upon the settlers. The Irish followed the Mormons onto the lake in the fishing boats and returned the gun fire. Precisely at this time, the steamer Morgan passed through the battle area, bringing it to a conclusion.

Eventually, both sides became more tolerant and that same year joined in an enormous Feast of Bounty to celebrate their hard-won unity.

On the day of the re-enactment, local merchants will peddle wares on the street dressed in authentic costumes with several organizations providing concession service.

Other events include sidewalk sales, an old-time church bazaar, and a family chicken dinner sponsored by the local Lion's Club chapter. The Charlevoix Historical Society will be offering a collector's edition postage stamp along with original etchings of historeal scenes, and recordings of the original theme composed for the occasion, The Ballad of The Pine River Battle.

Dave Phillips, mastermind of the project, says that this nugget of early Americana will be witnessed by between 5,000-8,000 vistors, including local, state and national dignitaries.

Beatty: One agency can regulate

"The only agency that has the power to regulate Indian fishing is the Department of the Interior," says Charlevoix County Prosecuting Attorney Scott Beatty. "And I hope they do (regulate) to preserve the fisheries resource."

Beatty made this comment following Judge Noel Fox's ruling that said the State of Michigan cannot regulate Indian fishing.

"The state has always lacked authority to arrest and prosecute Indians for violation of its statues governing fishing, and lacks authority to maintain records of such arrests and prosecutions," said Fox. "It is the duty of the state to expunge such records, cease such enforcement and to provide such relief, including payment of damages and expenses, as may be necessary to make the affected Indians whole."

Said Beatty, "I am absolutely without power to act in any Indian fishing case. The court has ruled and we have to obey that rule. We have no choice. It's the law."

It was reported Monday that at least one Indian fisherman plans to ask for compensation - that he claims is due him - after fish were confiscated from his gill net.

State officials have said they will appeal Fox's decision. Beatty said it is possible Attorney General Frank Kelley could attempt to expedite the case to get a ruling from the 6th Court of Appeals in Cincinnati "fairly soon."

Kelley, however, has sounded less optimistic in news reports, saying it could take as long as five years before the Federal appeals court would rule on the case.

Meanwhile, state Sen. Mitch Irwin said he was "deeply disturbed" by Fox's decision upholding "unlimited fishing rights for the Bay Mills and Sault Ste. Marie Chippewa Indians on parts of Lakes Huron, Michigan and Superior."

"I am deeply disturbed by the far reaching implications of this ruling and I am pleased the Attorney General is appealing the judgment to a higher court," Irwin said. "I am opposed to unrestricted gill net fishing by anyone, Indian or non-Indian. This fishing method threatens a number of fish species whose populations are supported by fishing license revenues."

U.S. Congressman Robert Davis has called for abrogation of two 19th Century treaties which allows the Indians to fish without state interference.

SGN states position

Editor:

Many adverse editorials and reporting have appeared in area news media commenting on the racist and violent aspects of our Association.

It seems only fair that a retort and clarification of our position involving "Gill Netting" be allowed too.

First - Never!, have we condoned violence in any form, nor are we racists or bigots. 46% of our membership consists of retirees who have brought life savings into the area, bought or built homes, and are active in both religious and civic affairs of the local bay communities. 75% are exservicemen. 22% are self employed. 100% of our membership buy hunting and fishing licenses annually. (Research will prove and reveal this to be a self imposed fee to propagate fish and game.) The average age of the membership is 44. Does common sense and logic prompt such a group to be labled "Ku Klux Klanners"? We are however, basically and emphatically against "Gill Netting and Gill Netters". If a minority group exercising dual citizenship, not subject to our laws, but still recieving all our benifits, social services, and excessive Federal finaneial subsidiary falls into that catcgory – So be it!

Second – Public opinion pictures the "Gill Netter" as a pitiful, be roggled figure, standing on a rock, waving a small hand net, haphazardly attempting to catch a Lake Trout. NOT SO! "Gill Nets" are vicious and indestructible monofillament killers, capable of killing all game fish, regardless of species, embedded in it's webbs. Single three hour placements can and do harvest 3000 lbs. and more of game fish. Nets abandoned, and they are, not only kill but also waste thousands of game fish annually.

Third – Ten years ago, due to Gill Netting and Lamprey invasion, Lake Michigan became a fishless wonder. Our tax and license money with tireless D.N.R. effort, eliminated the Lamprey and re-established the Lake to support a multi-million dollar tourist and sport fishing attraction to coastal areas.

In conclusion – recent D.N.R. figures reveal 2,000,000 plus lbs. of game fish were taken by "Gill Netters" in 1978. These fish all went to commercial markets with the bulk going as far as Chicago, Philadelphia, and New York. Basic investigation proves our license and tax dollars have financed a multi million dollar fishery to a small minority who with the bulk going as far as Chicago, Philidelphia, and New York. Basic investiagation proves our license and tax dollars have financed a multi million dollar fishery to a small minority who with boats, motors, and illegal nets, (also financed with our tax dollars via the Bureau of Indian Affairs.) are averaging $1500.00 and upwards per day, per boat, and rapidly depleting a long sought dream. After fifty years of hard work and some sacrifices our dreams almost become reality. By God's grace some of us may have a few years left but certainly not another bfe time. Does this stand warrant the "Klan" label?

Supporting inflation

People that didn't vote pay property taxes that support capitalistic inflation. The $700,000 – needed to increase the Charlevoix school building does not include the cost of $301,000 – for the use of credit for 11 years which adds 47% of the cost. This kind of funding is paying tribute by tax exempt bonds to accumulated money power. The repayments would probably be on a yearly bases which could then be reinvested by the accumulaters. There would also be a profit of 25% for the building contractors and material handlers and don't forget that everything and everyone involved has to be insured in every direction which would take about 12% which is good for the insurance reinvesters as they are themainholders and accumulaters of tax exempt bonds. In the total cost of $1,001,000 – about 3% might be used for local labor. This is an exceptance of funding by a dictum of capitalistic privileges and double standards. First we support these values by taxation on property values which are mostly passed on down to the consumer in total discard of income values. This is a placement of money power first and the needs of the people second. The US. Constitution says Congress has the power to coin money and regulate the value there of. There could be an issue of credit by petition for public use from a Federal revolving fund to furnish credit at cost of handling and refunding by graduated income taxes which would help the patriotic people of privileged income ownership control the values of exchange by taxable reinvestment of excessive incomes. This would give more opportunities to the economlcally disadvantaged by controlling inflation and fulfill the peoples needs.

All hail rhubarb

If I should ever be called upon to stage a spring festival, I am almost certain my central theme would be rhubarb.

Rhubarb? Yes, rhubarb, the homely elephant-eared monstrosity that grows in the backyard year after year with no particular attention and provides so much good eating during the spring and summer.

Frozen rhubarb can provide the same delights year 'round.

I am always a little surprised when I see rhubarb for sale in our local supermarkets, because when I was a kid in Detroit, almost everyone had a patch of rhubarb in his backyard.

Of course, in those days Wayne County led the world in the production of rhubarb, a statistic which the local press handled with a great deal of indifference. It just didn't sound right to have the "Automobile Capital of the World" and "Arsenal of Democracy" also parading around as the "Rhubarb Capital of the World." It's OK to blow your horn, but you don't blow it about rhubarb.

However I do remember when I was a small child visiting a large, subterranean rhubarb nursery with my father, I don't know precisely where the farm was located, but I do remember what seemd to be miles of dimly lighted nursery tobles from which sprouted long, pale pink stalks of rhubarb.

Above ground there were additional miles of more robust rhubarb plants with dark green leaves and dark red stalks. Very Christmasy.

Later, when I was about five, I decided to go into the rhubarb business on my own. We had several clumps of the plant growing in the backyard and I noticed that my mother never used nearly as much as she could have in pies, sauces and preserves. So I'd bundle up a few stalks, wrap it in wet newspaper, tie It with string, load it to my wagon and take it off through the neighborhood selling rhubarb for a nickle a bunch to people who didn't grow their own. The niekles just rolled in.

Before long, some of my regular customers began calling the house to inquire if they could be guaranteed two bunches of rhubarb on such and such a date. My mother was a little surprised to find a full-scale truck garden operating under her nose without her knowledge or opproval. But she sort of liked the idea and turned all the business arrangements over to my big sister who also shared in the profits.

When my family moved from Detroit to Oakland County in 1950, we simply couldn't leave all those rhubarb roots behind despite the fine print in the sales agreement. When I got married, I transplanted some of the original stock in Holly and, of course, when we moved to Charlevoix 15 years ago, a box of rhubarb roots rode in the car trunk.

Rhubarb belongs to the genus Rheum and is a member of the buckwheat family. The genus has about 20 species, all indigenous to Asia. The garden variety is called Rheum rhaponticum which is loaded with citric and malic acids and make delicious pies. Another variety, Rheum officinale, is used in medicine. The leaves of the plant, indicentally, are rich in oxolic acid and are poisonous. Oxolic acid is so powerful it is used to bleach wood.

What is so amazing about rhubarb is its hardiness. It prefers a heavy clay loam, but will survive almost anywhere. The first red buds appear even before the snow leaves, and it is usually reody for the first picking by early May.

It seems to help if you transplant the roots to a new location every four to five years. But you don't have to. So far as I can tell, rhubarb is indifferent to fertilizers. It seems to do as well with it as without it. My mother read somewhere once that rhubarb plants like pan drippings and dutifully buried a small quantity of bacon grease near each plant every spring. It might have helped, but I really don't know. It does just as well without it.

Oddly enough, rhubarb appears to be almost immune to most garden blights. Nothing attacks it except small children who seem to enjoy the tang and crunch of new rhubarb stalks, freshly picked.

Adults prefer it as pie, either alone or mixed with other fruits, such as strawberries or raspberries. It's also good stewed with a little sugar and a pat of butter.

All hail the lowly rhubarb plant. Long may it wave.

A tribute to Abe Ribicoff

WASHINGTON — We're losing Abe Ribicoff, a tough, skillful and valuable senator, because he is smart enough to quit while he's ahead. Ribicoff, 69, in the political game since 1938, says he won't stand for reelection in 1980.

Ribicoff, never a "buddy buddy" boy, was always a highly electable Democrat in Connecticut, where voters love to split tickets. He could be abrupt and contentious, but was always respected for his abilities. Abe represented the best to come out of ethnic-Democratic politics. We will miss him.

It was as obvious as a kosher pickle that Abe Ribicoff was Jewish, championed civil rights, fought bigotry, and was ardently devoted to Israel. Yet no senator took more vicious abuse than Ribicoff for his courageous support of President Carter's "airplane package" in which Egypt and Saudi Arabia got hot jet fighter planes along with Israel.

That airplane deal convinced Egypt, at least, that Carter was serious about peace and led to Camp David and the peace treaty. When Carter saw Ribicoff at the Begin-Sadat signing ceremony, he said: "I thank you from the bottom of my heart, Abe. We couldn't have done this without you."

Ribicoff had been reviled by Jewish groups and old friends for going against the Israeli lobby, for backing Carter's controversial Middle East policy, even for being a royal guest in Saudi Arabia.

"Nobody likes getting beat up," Ribicoff recalls of the attacks on him. "But history proved I was right. Some lifelong friends who abandoned me came back shamefacedly. In the long run, Israel is better off because of this peace process."

After serving as a state senator, police court judge, and congressman, Ribicoff predicted in 1950 that young John F. Kennedy would be the Republic's first Catholic President. In 1956, he gave the vice-presidential nominating speech for Kennedy after first backing him for President.

After being elected in 1960, Kennedy said Abe could have any job he wanted; Ribicoff took HEW. Though Kennedy offered him a seat on the Supreme Court, Ribicoff begged off, and went home to run for the Senate in 1962.

Though he had been a successful governor and lost only one election (that in 1952 to Sen. Prescott Bush with Ike running) Ribicoff ran into big political trouble. A guy named Kowalski almost beat him fnr the nomination at the state convention, and an apple farmer named Horace Seely-Brown, who dispensed potholders to voters, came very close to winning the Senate race that fall.

Ribicoff has had no election trouble since. Indeed, he has been called on to help others. When Jewish voters shied away from Bob Kennedy in 1964, Ribicoff came to the rescue. Joe Kennedy, father of the famous brothers, was disliked by older Jewish voters for his anti-British sentiments in 1940. After a week of speaking to Jewish groups Abe told Bnb Kennedy: "It's tough. I see the same disbelieving faces I saw in 1960 when I did this for jack."

Even now, while backing Carter for reelection, Ribicoff nurtures support for Sen. Edward Kennedy, if he ever becomes a candidate.

His instincts are liberal, but Ribicoff usually follows the art of the possible. He originally championed Ralph Nader, but wouldn't agree with Nader's extreme charges. Ribicoff pushed for catastrophic health insurance, not Kennedy's comprehensive, costly system.

Ribicoff dresses and grooms inpeccably, but he was a street kid who had his nose broken in one of many fights. He grew up in a third-floor flat because his factory-worker father couldn't afford the slightly higher rents for lower floors.

"I came from the wrong side of the tracks," Ribicoff says, "went to work when I was 11, and never got home until eight at night. I learned to be myself. The only few whom people don't respect is one who doesn't want to be Jewish. There's much less prejudice now than when I was a kid.

The thrill of my life was when I visited Slonim, my father's village near the Polish border. It was like 'Fiddler on the Roof.'"

So now Abe Ribicoff, a millionaire from real-estate investments, an admired, respected senator, decides that it is best to do his fading away in life out of public limclight. He'll travel and give some speeches, and enjoy his country home. We were lucky to have him here these 18 years – the same numer of years, by the way, that Kennedy, a generation younger, has been a senator.

Ribicoff came with sinew, brains and that kind of earnest, creative cuergy that growing up poor and ambitions provides so generously.

Unprotected rubbish attracts pests and vermins

Spring brings green fields, warm rains, flowers and a winter's accumulation of rubbish. After the snow leaves, rubbish that was covered during the winter appears and causes blemishes across Northern Michigan.

Spring is also a time when rodents and insects come out of hibernation. Unprotected rubbish will feed and attract such animals as squirrels, racoons, rats and dogs. Rubbish may also serve as proper storage collection and disposal of refuse (garbage and rubbish) in a community or rural area can be a factor to a generally poor overall environment.

The staff of the Environmental Health Section of the District Health Department No. 3 (Antrim, Charlevoix, Emmet and Otsego Counties) recommend that the clean-up program be a community wide process. Dean Mikulski, director of Environmental Health said "It does little good for one individual to clean a small area if his neighbors failed to take an equally active interest. A community wide program is most effective because it can eliminate larger areas used for feeding and breeding of rodents and insects."

Gordon Block, an environmentalist for District Health Department Number Three stated "Prevention and control will help eliminate pests and vermins. This control must be more than a one shot affair, it must be continued or rodents and insect population will increase rapidity."

Burning of garbage in back yards, or in open areas is not recommended. The burning creates foul odors and may be a fire danger. The residue that remain after burning will often attract pests.

The use of regular licensed pick-up service is recommended if available. Rubbish should be stored in covered containers that are not easily opened or pushed over by dogs, skunks, or other animals.

If you have questions about rubbish, please contact the Environmental Section of the District Health Department.

Wetlands bill: Unworkable

I am extremely disappointed with the recent Senate approval of legislation attempting to protect Michigan's wetland's areas. Although the concept of preserving essential wetland areas is a good one, the bill approved by the Senate is ambiguous, unworkable and not in the best interests of Northern Michigan.

The most glaring drawback of Senate Bill 3 is that fact that it does not require an inventory of Michigan land prior to enactment of the bill. Without this inventory, the state will be attempting to protect wetlands without knowing where they are.

Another major drawback in the bill is the lack of any compensation for landowners whose property rights are restricted by the measure. It is bad enough that people can be denied the use of their own private property under the terms of this bill. To restrict these rights without any kind of finaneial compensation is adding insult to injury.

I attempted to amend the bill on the Senate floor so that it would be more responsive to the needs of Northern Michigan residents.

One amendment would have required a county by county inventory prior to the bill taking effect so that we would know which wetlands would be affected. I also proposed an amendment that would have tinked the administration of this measure with other existing environmental law in an effort to eliminate some of the red tape and bureaucratic delay involved in another permit procedure. Another amendment would have established financial compensation in the form of tax breaks for land owners whose property rights were limited by the bill.

I was successful in amending the bill to require that at least one member of the wetlands appeal board be a resident of the Upper Michigan. This will insure that the people most affected by this proposal will at least have some input into the regulation process.

The bill now goes to the House of Representatives, where I will continue my fight to have the bill amended into a more reasonable form.

The members of the Northern Miehigan legislative delegation recognize that there is some abuse of our wetland areas, particularly in the inetropolitan areas. We agree that we mustn't be so shortsighted that we fail to recognize that the same abuse could happen in the north country.

At the same time, however, we will not support legislation which runs roughshod over the property rights of landowners, creates new, unnecessary bureaucratic restrictions on land use, and proceeds in a haphazard manner without benefit of an inventory of all state lands.

The rights of Northern Michigan taxpayers would be infringed by this legislation and I will do all I can to reverse that situation in the week ahead.

Another issue affecting Northern Michigan residents is the recent federal court ruling by U.S. District Judge Noel Fox reaffirming Indian fishing rights in Michigan waters under 19th century treaties.

The court upheld unlimited fishing rights for the Boy Mills and Sault Ste. Marie Chippewa Indians on parts of Lakes Huron, Michigan and Superior.

I am deeply disturbed by the far reaching implications of this ruling and I am pleased the Attorney General is appealing the judgement to a higher court.

I am opposed to unrestricted gill net fishing by anyone, Indian or non-indian. This fishing method threatens a number of fish species whose populations are supported by fishing license revenues.

The entire situation has been even further complicated by a contradictory ruling from a State Appeals Court that says Indians have no treaty right to catch fish artificially planted in the Great Lakes.

It is obvious to me that this entire matter will eventually be settled in a higher court, quite possibly the U.S. Supreme Court.

In the interim, we must work with the leadership in the state and federal government and the Indian communities to assure that we do not deplete our precious fishing resources.

Mitch Irwin is the state senator in the 37th District.

Budget cuts necessary

While California suffered through gas shortages last week, Michigan legislative leaders learned that we have a shortage all our own; money needed to run the state.

Even though Gov. Milliken submitted a balanced budget in January for the 1979-80 fiscal year which begins Oct. 1, it has become apparent that we are already $100 million over the original $9.5 billon budget recommendation.

In addition, the governor's budget needs to be revised to accommodate a section of the voter-approved Headlee tax limitation amendment to the State Constitution. That section prohibits the state government – the governor and the Legislature – from reducing the percentage of the annual state budget earmarked for local governments.

In other words, if 40% of the 1979 state budget is set aside for local governments (including school districts), then 40% is the least that can be earmarked in future budgets.

The message now from the governor and his budget director, Dr. Jerry Miller, is that we do not have the funds to meet the extra $100 million in bills, and that we are out of ratio with the requirements of the Headlee amendment.

The extra $100 million cost is due primarily to $52 million needed for unanticipated Medicaid costs, $34 million for a 7% increase in civil service salaries, and $10 million to help fund enforcement of the new public health code.

Faced with this situation, there are three options the governor and the Legislature can utilize: 1) raise taxes; 2) dip into the budget stabilization fund; or 3) cut state spending.

I don't think anyone believes this state needs more taxes, and I cannot support that option. The second option, using the budget stabilization fund, would defeat the purpose of the fund when it was created. The fund was created as a special type of "savings account" to be used during times of recession or poor economic health of the State of Michigan, recognizing Michigan's heavy dependence on the automobile industry and the state of our economy being closely related to ups and downs in automobile sales.

This dependence provides much revenue for the state when the auto industry is booming and record numbers of cars are being sold, as has been the case recently. However, during leaner times when the economy falters, the state needs the "rainy day fund", as it has been called, to help fund vital programs.

To use the rainy day fund when the economy does not dictate its use would be unwise, in my opinion, as this would surely leave it open to every special interest that comes along with a hardship story.

That leaves one option, the one I support, and that is to cut the $100 million from the state budget. Budget cuts are never easy because they affect all of us to some extent, since we are all on the receiving end of services of the state, some more than others. However, I believe it is a time for priorities to be set for spending the state's money, just as you and I do when we budget our own incomes and determine what is "more necessary" than something else. I also believe that there is room for much improvement in the efficiency area of government operations.

Next week the governor will present a list of cuts he thinks can be made. The House Republican Caucus Efficiency Task Force will also make recommendations for cuts. I am a member of this Task Force, and we have been working hard to find a better way, so to speak, to help the taxpayers get the most benefit from their tax dollars. I am a firm believer in cutting waste and stressing efficiency, and I know many of you believe that many dollars are wasted because of the way state government functions.

Charlevoix's baseball team swept a Michigan-Huron Shores Conference doubleheader from Grayling Monday 14-8 and 9-2.

The Rayders collected 15 hits in the opener as Jerry Sladek stopped the Vikings on 12 hits. Phil Morrison had four hits, Jack Carlson and Bob Russell three and Scott Morgan two to pace the Rayder offensive attack. Carlson and Russell each hit a home run.

Neyman named golf pro

Gene Neyman has been named the new golf pro at the Antrim Dells Country Club.

A native of Grand Blanc, Neyman has been a golf pro for 12 years. For the past two years, he worked at the Gaylord Country Club. Neyman also has worked at the Birmingham Country Club (where he taught and studied under Bob Taski), the Meceola Country Club at Big Rapids, and the Grand Blanc Golf Club.

A member of the Professional Golfers Association (PGA), Neyman started his new job April 25.

Antrim Dells has an 18 hole championship golf course. It will be one of two sites this summer (along with the Belvedere Country Club) for the State Amateur qualifing rounds (June 19 and 20).

Neyman said the course is in "real good" shape and that tournament officials have completed staking the course out for the qualifier.

Neyman said applicatiuns are available at Antrim Dells for golfers who would like to try and qualify for the tournament. Golfers must have a four handicap or less.

In addition to the State Amateur qualifier, Antrim Dells will also host several other tournaments this summer including the Pro-Am for the Northern Chapter of the Michigan PGA (July 23) and the Michigan Dental Association golf tournament.

The country club has a complete pro shop featuring "exlravagant" womens wear, Neyman said. There also is a driving range adjacent to the course for players needing improvement on that segment of the game. Neyman will give golf lessons, too.

Heyman is a Class A member of the PGA. But in order to keep that coveted status, he must be recertified every three years. The recertification program requires that he continue to play, fill speaking engagements, write for golfing journals, attend PGA meetings or hold PGA offices.

In the nightcap, the Rayders pounded out 14 hits including three hits by Leslie Wood and two each by Brenda Buchanan, Holly Taber and Jackie Paul. Taber got credit for the win.

Last week the Rayders swept a doubleheader from Pellston by scores of 12-1 and 10-9 and took a single contest from Central Lake 22-8.

Against Pellstun, Charlevoix managed just two hits in its 12-1 triunph: But the Rayders were aided by 21 walks. Taber and Bambi Balch collected the two hits. Klooster pitched a five hitter to get the win.

In the second game, the Rayders won a tight one run contest as Taber picked up the win with Klooster finishing up in relief. Buchanan had two hits to pace Charlevoix's eight hit attack.

The Rayders had little trouble disposing of Central Lake. Cotieen LaBlance pitched a six hitter and received credit for the win. Selissen, Taber and LaBlance all had two hits for Charlevoix with one of Selissen's hits a home run.

Cash prizes offered in canoe race

Charlevoix area residents will have a chance to test their canoeing skills during the Charlevoix Centennial Celebration Memorial Day weekend.

Canoeists will compete for a $50 first prize, $30 second prize and $20 third prize in the Charlevoix Centennial Canoe Race at 1 p.m., May 27 on Round Lake in downtown Charlevoix. The race is sponsored by the Charlevoix Area Jaycees.

Mike Greeley, Dan Miller and Dan Alder prepare for the canoe race. (Sorry guys, only two to a canoe!)

"Because Charlevoix has its historical roots in nautical activities, we thought it would be appropriate to sponsor a canoe race during the centennial celebration," Michael A. Greeley, Jaycee vice president explained. "Charlevoix was first established as a trading center by Native Americans who traveled here on foot and by canoe to exchange goods."

The race will follow a course clockwise around Round Lake, which will be designated by markers on the lake.

Canoeists are invited to join in the fun by registering for the race before May 25. Entry blanks may be obtained at the Charlevoix Chamber of Commerce, Ben Franklin and the Wharf Side Market.

Greeley said only two competitors will be allowed in each canoe. Each team must have a designated captain and at least one member who is 18 years old or older. Canoes must be a minimum of 12 feet long and race participants must wear U.S. Coast Guard approved life jackets.

Line up for the race begins at 11 a.m. May 27 with check-in closing at noon. An entry fee of $10 will be required.

For further information contact Greeley at (616) 547-6541 or write the Charlevoix Area Jaycees, P.O. Box 333, Charlevoix, or contact the Chamber of Commerce office.

'Chick' Harbert to conduct golf clinic

One of America's, as well as Michigan's golfing greats, "Chick" Harbert, will be conducting a golfing clinic Saturday, June 2, from 4 to 5 p.m. at AG-A-MING Golf Course. The clinic will be open to the public.

AG-A-MING Golf Course is located on West Torch Lake Drive, between McLaughlin Road and Barnes Road in Antrim County, Torch Lake Township.

"The clinicis a means of introducing "Chick" and our new operation to area residents," said W.A. Siebenthaler, who purchased the nine hole golf course at the close of last season.

"Chick" Harbert is one of the all-time golfing greats – PGA Champion U.S. Ryder Cup Team Captain and a member of the PGA Hall of Fame.

For years Harbert practically ruled professional golf in Michigan. In 1946, 1947, 1949, 1950, 1953 and again in 1959, he won the Michigan PGA. He has also won the Beaumont Open, was runner-up in the St. Pete Open and won the Texas Open, defeating Ben Hogan in a play off. In 1952, Harbert was runner-up for the National PGA title and the following year capped off a fine performance by winning that prestigious championship.

In recent years he has gained recognition as one of the top teaching professionals in the country. Harbert now conducts his Pro-Gressive Golf Teaching Program at the Ocean Reef Club in Key Largo, Florida, and will bring his program to AG-G-MING in August. Harbert's program encompasses working with an individual player for four to five days.

"A round of golf can be fersurely of intense, sociable or hostile, depending on the players and their attitudes," said Harbert. "I take an individual and actually play with him, transmitting the knowledge I have gained over the years of play to the client. It takes only an appreciation of the game's potential to fully enjoy it.

"I feel for the person who has played, but never really enjoyed it or, perhaps, has never reached their full potential. This type of reaching approach works a lot better than just standing on a practice tee swinging a golf club while being analyzed by a pro," Harbert concluded.

W.A. Siebenthaler, newspaper executive, banker and real estate investor, purchased AG-A-MING Golf Course last fall from Roy Wetmore and an additional eighty acres of land this spring for future expansion. Bill Siebenthaler and "Chick" Harbert, who will have a vested interest in the corporation, AG-A-MING Golf Club, Inc., will work together to develop and expand the operation. "Chick" will be in Michigan for most of the month of August and other times as needed. Bill, who has had property on Torch Lake for over twenty years, will be in Michigan frequently from spring through winter.

Davis wants answers

Northern Michigan Congressman Bob Davis is asking steel companies to answer several questions to his satisfaction before he will consider supporting expansion of a winter navigation program.

"This issue has become so clouded by emotion and controversy that no one has been able to look at both sides objectively. What I am attempting to do is gather the facts and provide them to the people who are directly affected by extended navigation," Davis said.

In a letter to the general manager of Lakes Shipping for U.S. Steel Corporation, Davis asked for information on several points that have been raised regarding the company's shipping program.

Davis asked for information regarding safety, environmental and economic factors, as well as possible alternatives to winter shipping. He also requested specific data on the impact of either a one or two-year moratorium on winter shipping, including jobs affected, costs, and possible policy changes regarding importation of foreign ore.

The congressman also questioned the company's role in the past with regard to financing improvements and modifications for aids to navigation such as ice booms and bubbler systems, as well as resolution of problems which plague local communities, particularly those along the St. Mary's river.

"This question is one of great importance to me, as the area most affected by the winter shipping program is along the St. Mary's. I do not believe the problems created by the program have been resolved in the least," Davis said. "Before I would consider supporting expansion of a winter navigation program, the problems that exist in the St. Mary's would first have to be resolved."

The determined survive

"I Will Survive"
as sung by Gloria Gaynor
D. Fekaris-F. Perren
c/1978 Perrin Vibes (ASCAP)

I Will Survive
First I was afraid, I was petrified
Just thinkin' I could never live without you by my side
But then I spent so many nights thinkin' how you did me wrong and I grew strong and I learned how to get along
And so you're back, from out of space
I just walked in to find you here with that sad look upon your face
I should have changed that stupid lock
I should have made you leave your key
If I'd have known for just one second you'd be back to bother me

CHORUS
Go on now go, walk out the door
Just turn around now 'cause you're not welcome anymore

Weren't you the one who tried to hurt (break) me with good-bye did I crumble, did I lie down and die?
Oh no, not I – I will survive
Oh as long as I know how to love I know I'm still alive
I've got all my life to live
I've got all my love to give
And I'll survive, I will survive

If you'll promise if I ask not to fall apart
It's kind of hard to mend the pieces of my broken heart
And I spent oh so many nights just feeling sorry for myself
I used to cry, but now I hold my head up high
And you see me Somebody new
I'm not that chained up little person still in love with you
And so you felt like droppin' in and just expect me to be free
And now I'm savin' all my lovin' for someone who's lovin' me

When a song has been popular for so long, you finally find yourself unable to ignore its presence any longer, like it or not.

There's something very magnetic about the determination behind those words "I Will Survive" the pledge of a once jilted lover to go on. Universally speaking, anyone can identify who has survived a difficult time, be it a love affair like the girl in the song or any crisis from which he bstener has emerged victorious rather than succumbing to self-pity. I felt a similar emotion as I pulled myself and every member of the family through the flu last week. Today we're SOMEBODY if we can just keep our heads above water.

What is it in the human psyche that enables us to pick up the pieces of a bad situation and make it bearable? And what is lacking when we fail to try anymore? Self-preservation is a very strong instinct. Considering all the circumstances that work against us, it's really a very remarkable human ingredient. Perhaps that's why we can't help but admire the girl in this song. Self-preservation is especially difficult in matters of love because this is probably our most vulnerable area of self-esteem.

The song "I Will Survive" is basically an admonition for us: to keep our chins up. Survival is not necessarily of the fittest, but of the most determined.

BPW works to improve women's role in society; Charlevoix chapter formed

Sally Taber is president of the newly-formed Charlevoix chapter of Business and Professional Women. This week the Courier talks with Ms. Taber about that organization, and about her own job.

COURIER: How long have Business and Professional Women's Clubs been in existence?

TABER: The National Federation was founded in 1919. There are now more than 170,000 women in the Federation, representing 3,300 clubs in 53 state federations. In addition, there are a quarter of a million working women in 50 other countries who are affiliated with the International Federation of Business and Professional Women.

COURIER: Who is eligible for membership in BPW?

TABER: All women working in business or the professions and women enrolled in college or a university or other educational institution above the high school level.

COURIER: What is the purpose of the organization?

TABER: Basically, to improve women's role in the world.

COURIER: How does BPW go about that?

TABER: Among other things, BPW has been working steadily on ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment, initiated Woman of the Year Awards for clubs and state federations, devised a plan to develop speaking ability and leadership potential, established numerous scholarships and fellowships, and started management seminars to develop management potential of members.

COURIER: What are your goals?

TABER: The list is rather long, but it includes endorsing qualified women for policy-making positions and public offices, guaranteeing equal rights and eliminating discriminations against women, extending educational opportunities, participating in solving energy and environmental problems, paying tribute to women's achievements, elevating the dignity of women as career persons and homemakers, and paying tribute to women's achievements.

COURIER: What specific services does BPW offer its members?

TABER: They receive the national magazine and state and club bulletins, they may attend state and national conventions and conferences, they may go to management seminars and legislative conferences, they may receive research help from the Foundation Library, and they may take advantage of the optional insurance plans. It boils down to career development, personal-development, community consciousness, legislative involvement, international understanding, continuing education, business contacts, and stimulating fellowship.

COURIER: How did you, personally, become interested in BPW?

TABER: I always wanted to work with other women in the professional world, to get together with them and discuss needs and try to help each other.

COURIER: What is your job?

TABER: I'm Register of the Probate Court and the Juvenile Court. I'm in charge of all papers, check them and make sure they are ready for Judge Murphy to sign. I also collect fees and make out inheritance tax forms and work with guardianships and assist with mental cases – I'm really the general assistant to the Judge.

COURIER: What other jobs have you had?

TABER: I was assistant manager of the Beverly Hilton Hotel in Beverly Hills, California. Before that I was in charge of Citations for the Medal of Honor for the Marine Corps. The last one I made out was for a neighbor in Lansing.

COURIER: Where did you grow up?

TABER: In East Lansing. I also went to MSU.

COURIER: How did you get to Charlevoix?

TABER: My grandfather, Levi Rawsontaltt, started Eveline Orchards and we spent time here in the summer. One of my first jobs was as hostess at the Weathervane.

COURIER: What are your hobbies?

TABER: I like to play bridge and golf and tennis. I also spend a lot of time going to my daughter's basketball and baseball games.

COURIER: How many children do you have?

TABER: Two. John is 18 and Holly is 14.

COURIER: Do you belong to any organization other than BPW?

TABER: Just the Legal Secretaries Association and the Probate Registers Association.

Mrs. Ed Weliver, president of the Beta Sigma Phi sorority (Xi Epsilon Gamma chapter) presents a check for $500 to Jan Mancinelli, director of the Women's Resource Center in Petoskey. The money will be used to help set-up a spouse abuse shelter for women in the area.

The Center must raise about $20,000 in local funds in order to qualify for money from the Domestic Violence and Prevention and Treatment Board. According to Mrs. Weliver, the donation was one of the largest made by the sorority in recent years.

Data center estimates population in Charlevoix County up 5,000 since 1970

The Grand Traverse Area Data Center, which gathers and compiles information on many subjects, recently released some population statistics for Charlevoix County.

The Data Center estimates that the present population of the county is now 21,304, an increase of 4,763 over the 1970 census figure of 16,541.

The natural increase (births minus deaths) is listed at 808, and in-migration accounts for the remaining 3,955 of the population increase. Percentage-wise, in-migration was 83 percent of the increase.

A breakdown by age groups indicates that the greatest percentage of change in population occurred in the 25 to 29 year category, up 94.9 percent, or 1,818 from 933. The next greatest percentage of change occurred in 20 to 24 year category, up 89.4 percent, or 1,660 from 980.

But the older age groups in Charlevoix County also show a high percentage of increase. Persons in the 65 to 69 age group increased by 53.9 percent, up to 939 from 610, and those in the 70 to 74 age group increased by 52.1 percent, up to 736 from 484. Even the senior-senior citizens increase in number; those over 80 rising 41.7 percent, up to 544 compared with 384 in 1970.

The median age of Charlevoix County residents is now estimated at 29.1, compared with 26.8 in 1970.

There were 5,002 households in Charlevoix County in 1970. A survey made in 1978 indicates that number has risen to 8,519, an increase of 70.3 percent. Of these households, 30.8 percent were made up of two persons, followed by 16 percent four-person households, 14.2 percent three-person households, 13.6 percent one-person households, 13.6 percent five-person households, and 11.8 percent six-and-above households. The median number of persons per households was 2.39 in 1978, down from the 1970 figure of 3.35.

Seasonal residents added 12,101 to the population in July of 1978, and 10,232 in August of 1978. The next highest numbers of seasonal residents, 3,208, were listed for October of 1978, followed by 2,617 in May and 2,145 in September. The largest number of winter seasonal residents 1,363, were here in March, 1978.

The median family income in Charlevoix County in 1978 was $14,166. In 1970 it was $9,237, and in 1975 it was $11,200. Almost one-fourth, 24.2 percent, of the population earned $5,000 to $9,999 in 1978, while 24 percent earned between $10,000 and $14,999. Other wage categories were 5.4 percent under $5,000; 19.3 percent between $15,000 and $19,999; 14 percent between $20,000 and $24,999; 5.3 percent between $25,000 and $29,999; and 7.3 percent over $30,000.

Ma Bell makes change in E.J.

Michigan Bell customers in East Jordan were able to dial their own long distance person-to-person, collect, credit card and bill-to-third-number calls on Thursday.

E.W. (Mike) Reid, Michigan Bell local manager, said the company is gradually phasing out its Petoskey long distance operator service operations as part of a continuing program to give customers greater cost and efficiency benefits from new telecommunications technology.

He explained that the new dialing services are made possible by an electronic system with pushbutton consoles for operators which has replaced the older, cord-type operator switchboards.

When the phase-out of the Petoskey switchboard is completed 5-10-79, long distance calls from East Jordan will be routed to the company's electronic long distance center in Saginaw, Reid said.

When making one of the new time-saving calls, customers dial "O" (Operator), immediately followed by the area code and then the telephone number in the distant city, Reid said.

An operator at the company's electronic long distance center in Saginaw will come on the line long enough to get acceptance of a collect call, obtain credit card or bill-to-third-numbers, or to get the right person on the line for a person-to-person call.

There will be several customer benefits from this consolidation, Reid explained.

Operator-handled calls will go through much faster, operator response to customer calls will be quicker in most cases because of the bigger "team size".

Realtors to turn painters Saturday

To show that realtors care about their communities, members of the Antrim-Charlevoix Board of Realtors will descend on two pre-selected homes Saturday and give each a free exterior "face-lift."

Charlevoix County members will tackle a one and a half story home in East Jordan. Antrim County members have selected a Bellaire home for a similiar beauty treatment.

About 30 members from each county of the Board of Realtors are expected to participate in the one day blitz. The cost of all materials will be underwritten by the board and the labor will be provid free by the members.

"Maybe others in the community will be encouraged to improve the appearance of their own homes as a result of our effort," said Joe Morris, project co-chairman.

Earlier this year, members of the two county board were asked to submit the names of owners and locations of homes in their communities in need of attention. The board's Make America Better committee then selected two homes from the list. Permission for the two projects was then received from the owners.

Each year realtors across the country enter into projects to show their support for and concern with their communities. In the word's of co-chairman Bruce Hawkins, spearheading the Bellaire home renewal project, "it provides realtors with an opportunity to give something back to our hometowns."

Forensic students sparkle

Charlevoix High School was the the recent winner of the 1978-79 State Sweepstakes title in Class C/D over 37 other schools in this classification who qualified students for the state Individual Events finals Mrs. Connie Ford, forensics coach, has announced.

The competition was held in Ann Arbor with 11 students who has qualified in district and regional competition participating.

Geoff Nelson, a senior, placed first in the storytelling division, one of 12 categories in Special Events competition, Mrs. Ford said.

Two others reached the semi-finals in the Radio News category. They are Pam Sutherland who placed seventh and Carla Sizemore who came in eleventh in this event.

Missing the quarterfinals by 11 percentage points while tied in rank was the Multiple Reading group which placed thirteenth with their presentation of the familiar skit "Walter Mitty". This group is composed of Jack Carlson, John Grooters, Carolyn Loper, Tami Noirot, Pat Camelleri, Kim Schnackenberg and Keith Lehman.

Instituted for the first time this school year is a team championship for each school classification computed on the basis of total performance of all students representing the school in that particular classification Mrs. Ford explained.

It was this that brought the Class C/D title to Charlevoix. Finishing behind Charlevoix were Ithica in second place and Naugance in third place.

Wayne Memorial High School was the Class A titleholder and Birch Run High School in Class B.

Char-Em testing pre-schoolers

Charlevoix parents with young children have a good neighbor they may not even realize is theirs.

That good neighbor with many helping hands is the Intermediate School District (I.S.D.) Serving Charlevoix and Emmet counties from Pellston to Central Lake, the I.S.D. provides special services for 12 school districts within that area.

Good news for parents of pre-schoolers is that the I.S.D. has a pre-school program aimed at early detection of learning or developmental problems which can be diagnosed and explored while there is still plenty of time before Kindergarten.

If you live in Charlevoix and have a 3 or 4 year old child, you probably received a letter informing you of the Child Development Screening Clinics to be held at the Char-Em Intermediate School District office in May. Names were ascertained from a school census and are in no way indicative of the fact that you have a problem child. The Clinic provides an opportunity to meet with other parents as well as specialists on the pre-school team and to answer any questions you might have concerning your child's growth and development in the areas of: reception, expression, fine motor co-ordination, gross motor co-ordination, self-help, social development, thinking skills and learning.

If you have a nursery age child, one that will be eligible for Kindergarten in two years, and would like to participate, future clinics will be held on May 23 and May 30. You may call Joan Smith (547-9947) for further information.

The Char-Em Intermediate District is holding clinics to test pre-schoolers for learning and developmental problems. The testing is done on pre-schoolers so problems can be identified and corrected before a child starts kindergarten.

Schurrer: A farmer, soldier, musician and artist

George Schurrer

Part IV

By KATHYRN AMY

Their first child, Dorothy Ann, was born to them August 1, 1944 when George was 48 and Madeline was 39. Because of her age and weight, the baby was taken Caesarean section after a long and difficult labor. Dorothy was a beautiful baby, in every way normal. Seventeen months later un Feb. 28, 1946 a second child, George Francis, was born to them. George F. was also a beautiful, healthy baby. Madeline continued teaching for 12 more years while raising her family, then retired from teaching after 20 years of service.

When I met them their children were teenagers, and Madeline was a short, stout lady with a very pretty, very animated face. She was about the age of my mother, but she insisted that I call her Madeline; everyone did. She loved company and welcomed a steady procession of friends and relatives.

There was always something to eat, especially sticky buns, rich cookies and brownies. The coffee pot was always on, or put on as soon as company walked in the door. Her specialty, however, was cold tea, which she made very strong, very sweet, and very lemony. When her company was seated with something to eat and drink, she would talk, and talk, and talk, usually about the doings of her many friends and relatives or about her former summers spent in Bay View. A statement squeezed in by her company could always start her off talking about some other nice person she knew.

She was hostess to many nice people, and she wanted them all to know each other. We never stayed away from Madeline's house when she had company; we always went down to meet them. At her daughter's wedding reception in Chicago we met many more friends. In fact, no one around the big, round tables stayed strangers. Although it's very difficult for her now to walk after having suffered two strokes, Madeline still enjoys entertaining company and takes particular delight in her four grandchildren.

Schurrer first welcomed us and showed his friendship in a different way. For years he has been building his poured concrete and stone cottage. He began it when his children were toddlers, and slowly and steadily it has taken shape. Papa George has worked just that way, slowly and steadily it has habit was to get up very early, before anyone else in his family was awake, make coffee, and begin the heavy labor of cement work. But his expertise made knowledge and inachines work for him. He would work from sunrise to sunset and longer, usually taking tune out only for church, meals, or one of his many cups of coffee, sometimes taken at our cottage.

We had built an addition to our stone cottage and were now building a retirement house for my husband's parents back of it. In his 70's then, George supervised the pouring of the garage cement floor. With his tools he and his son and my husband did the leveling. He built the fireplace, laying the stone as my husband mixed the murtar and handed him the stone blocks. He mixed the marble-like cement hearth and laid the "H" initial in the stone chimney. And when the storm that sunk the Fitzgerald took out our seawall, he used his forms, and with the help of his son and my husband, he built us a new cement seawall. He even winched back onto the bluff a favorite flat two-ton rock so that we could again enjoy sitting on it to watch the lake.

And he always treated me in a courtly manner. My bluejeans might, he covered with cement dust from mixing a wheelbarrow full of mortar or with dirt from crawling around a crawlspace or with sweat from slinging a roof or pushing fiberglass insulation into a small corner of the attic, but Papa Schurrer always treated me like a delicate lady, handing me down from an unfinished floor to the ground, keeping me from little bumps, as if I were dressed in the long dresses I wore to the Bay View concerts both families attended.

He also showed us his friendship and knowledge in his after work conversations with us. My grandfather was born in Bopfingin, also George's hometown. He tole me Weinlanders had been recorded as officials in this free city since the 1300's. He also explained to me that a free city was one where master tradesmen gathered and were exempt from taxes paid the governing lords. My family's trade was leather tanning; and his family, former landed aristocracy then modestly farming, had bought my family's leather goods. This began to make history, always one of my husband's interests, real to me.

My husband is a private pilot, and George discussed with him his own early flight training taken in Chicago before the depression. My husband was also an Army officer, stationed for a time in Germany after World War II, and we have walked the battlefield of Verdun. Although in a different war in a different Army, George had fought there. They talked for hoors about strategies and tactics. Much of it meant little to me, but a few bits of information I found fascinating. Horses with broken legs need not be shot; they could be suspended in a sling after their legs were set to mend. All German soldiers of World War I did not fight under the Kaiser; they owed their allegiance to the different kings of the various states. If their wounds were not too serious, wounded soldiers collecting disability pensions were sent to dig with hand shovels the canal in northern Germany that ends at Heidersheim.

Some of George's six war wounds were serious, especially his head and long wounds. He is one of those who can predict rain because of the way humidity affects the shrapnel lodged in his lungs.

But he has also been seriously hurt since then. On Labor Day weekend in 1953 in a freak accident on route 66 by the Antrim County line while he was driving alone to Chicago his car rolled, landing upright in a ditch, but with the top bashed in eight inches, all the doors smashed, and the trunk torn off. He received first aid for a head wound at Charlevoix Hospital and felt well enough so that he discharged himself the next day. In Chicago an X-ray showed he needed to have sand washed from his brain. After this painful procedure he slept the night through, then took just a week off from work. It took him three months to fully recover from headaches that felt like pin pricks, but he was bowling again after 6 weeks with no ill effects, a feat which very much surprised his doctor.

Seventeen years later in 1970 he had been working with a table saw nn a very hot day. Evidently he passed out from the heat, and his hand fell across the blade of the saw. When the doctors told him he has lost two fingers, he told them, "Oh, well, throw them away. They were rid anyway."

From 1926 till 1944 George worked as an artist, but from 1944 until he retired he worked as an engineer. The Father at St. Colombanus where George had completed some art restoration in 1944 knew that an art degree from a German school at that time was a degree in both art and engineering, and he offered George his first job as an engineer. Because he now had a family to support, he accepted the offer. The job paid $400 a month, half as much as a heating firm position offered him, but it was steady employment.

While he was there he redid their entire heating plant and became their head engineer. He also was head engineer for Notre Dame High School where he came in 1958 for a salary of $5500 which, with no pay increase requests from George, soon became $8000. He color keyed their entire heating system. He also saved them an estimated $10,000 building an addition to their storage room. He retired in 1971 when he was 75 years. old.

Twice since he became an American citizen George has gone back to visit his three sisters and six brothers still living in Germany. The first time in 1965 when he went with his wife and children he found the country much changed, but his large family still warn and hospitable. The second time when he went over alone to celebrate his 80th birthday, they actually met him with a brass band!

That's a little bit like the way I feel about him. Farmer, soldier, student, musician, artist, immigrant, decorator, family man and friend, George Schurrer has been, and still is, quite an exceptional man.

home, and to the fact that people are being far more careful in making their travel plans.

In Traverse City, Hal Van Sumeran, executive director of the Traverse City Chamber of Commerce said, "We see no reason to be gloomy yet. There is no fall off in reservations for the summer."

In Charlevoix, the major motels report that accommodations are quickly becoming reserved through the summer into October. Real Estate offices say there are no homes left to be rented.

At the Ramada Inn in Mackinaw City, reservations are already ahead of last year.

A tavern owner in Brimley in the Upper Peninsula on Lake Superior said, "I don't think the price of gas is going to make any difference. The Canadians have had dollar gasoline for a long time and they still flock across the border as much as ever."

Everybody insists that people will take their vacations somehow, no matter what.

Some see a new pattern setting in – one of fewer visits but of longer duration, in one spot, which may account for the heavy reservations.

"Weekend activity has got to reduce one summer soon, if not this," says David Irish, president of Irish Boat Yard. "But we'll get people staying longer and planning better."

Irish said his business is sluggish because of inflation. "I don't see a bust but I don't see a boom, either."

Arthur Tebo, general manager of Boyne Highlands, said that because they rely largely on conventions and "golf packages" their summer business is holding up well.

"But if there is a gas shortage this summer we anticipate serious problems next winter."

Economics

"Since that time other significant and unforseen problems ... will surely bring the total cost of the project closer to $3 billion."

Mrs. Sinclair also stated that current radiation dosage limits for workers in the nuclear industry are expected to be lowered by a factor of ten. She quoted the Atomic Industrial Forum's publication Nuclear Industry as saying that if the dosage level limits were lowered the "impact could be crippling' in terms of operating costs. The increase in the number of workers needed would cost an additional $6.7 million in operation."

Investment analyst Uri B. Grannis, of William C. Rooney Company in Petoskey, a member of the New York Stock Exchange, observed, "Rightly or wrongly, a lot of people are very emotional on this subject. They are emotionnl both ways, pro and con."

Grannis was asked how the investment community saw nuclear power.

"People are asking about utilities and generally we talk about non-nuclear power utilities."

"My sources around the country are on both sides of the issue.

"The dangers of Three Mile Island, in accident has raised serious questions about the insurance for nuclear accidents. Under the Price-Anderson Act, the insurers, the companies' and the federal government's total liability for any one incident is $560 million. Once that is gone who will pay the expenses for the damages to people and property, critics ask. And critics ask, can a price tag he put on those damages if they include low level radiation's long term effects which can last for generations.

Alden Meyer, writing in the POWERLINE a publication of the Environmental Action group, Washington, O.C., asks, "Who will pay for Three Mile Island, a $3 billion mausoleum?"

Critics also point out that cost overruns and safety retro-fitting required by the NRC is running into the billions, for many plants. They contend this will all be passed on to the consumer.

Mary Sinclair said, at a meeting of the Harbor Springs and Petoskey city councils, that Dow Chemical Company Manager Joseph Temple recommended that Dow not become involved in the Midland Plant when construction costs began moving from $1.67 billion to $2 billion.

She said Gov. Milliken is supportive of legislation now being debated which would give him emergency powers to deal with an energy crisis in the state, such as lowering speed limit to 50 mph and transferring gasoline supplies from one section of the state to another. Meanwhile, he is urging motorists to conserve gasoline by driving less during the week so that there will be enough gas for the weekends.

Meanwhile, McComb reports that "We have received more inquiries about spring and summer travel than ever before," He said Michigan Travel Bureau offices in Chicago and Cleveland have been swamped as have the offices in the state itself. He said the Lansing office is so busy that all employees from top to bottom are required to give an hour a day answering phone and mail inquiries.

McComb attributes this demand to a catchy advertising program, to a decision by people to travel closer to

County gets $391,775

State fuel and weight taxes climbed by 37 percent in the first quarter of 1979 compared with the same period of 1978, the Michigan Department of Transportation reports.

The increase reflects higher gasoline, diesel fuel and license plate fees contained in a package of transportation bills approved last fall.

Charlevoix County received $391,775 for its first quarter payment - a substantial increase over a year ago when it received $288,659.

Emmet County fared well, too. The county road commission received $458,148 compared to $337,798 of a year ago.

In Antrim County, the road commission received $416,065 comapred to $307,544 in 1978.

Charlevoix Plant Conversion: Wet Process to Dry Process with Flash Calcining

Are there any advantages for Charlevoix-area residents?

There are residents who feel that mining-related industry generally has no place in northern Michigan. You are not strangers to Medusa employees; a few of us have sons or daughters, sisters or brothers, cousins, aunts or uncles, even mothers or fathers who feel the same way. For them, and all our friends and neighbors and acquaintances and visitors to the area, we can only hope this Community Report and those that follow will lead to a fuller understanding of the reasons Medusa stockholders are adding to their already sizable investment here in Charlevoix. Coincidental to the economic reasons and federal energy conservation objectives, there are local, state-wide and regional benefits which will be covered in these Reports.

Why cement?

Portland cement concrete is the most widely used construction material in the world. Throughout the United States, and here in the Charlevoix-area almost twice as much concrete is used as all other structural materials combined. The Oil Embargo of October 1973 increased the importance of cement concrete. Unlike all-base materials, cement at Medusa-Charlevoix is made from an abundant supply of natural resources, limestone, shale and sand from the Charlevoix area and coal from Ohio and Pennsylvania. Cement concrete is also more energy-efficient than steel and aluminum.

In early September, 1978, cement shortages occurred in Michigan which alarmed the Michigan Association of Home Builders, the Michigan Building Trades Council and Governor Milliken. On October 17, 1978 Governor Milliken said, "The cement shortage jeopardizes thousands of jobs in the construction industry and has caused slowdowns in many housing, road building, industrial and commercial projects."

There are many factors which contributed to this shortage. However, the purpose of this Community Report is not to repeat these generally recognized factors but rather to underline the critical importance of heating occurs prior to entering the kiln. During this process the particles of kiln feed are suspended in the gas stream resulting in very efficient heat transfer.

The clinker discharges from the kiln into a cooler where ambient air is used to cool it to a compatible temperature for handling and storage. Some of the hot air from the cooling process enters the kiln and is utilized in the combustion process. Additional hot air is transported to the Flash Calciner where it is also used in combustion. THIS RECOVERY AND RECYCLING OF HEAT WITHIN THE PROCESS CHARACTERIZES THE ENERGY EFFICIENCY OF OUR NEW FLASH CALCINING SYSTEM.

How does the Flash Calcining System Operate?

Kiln feed, a mixture of finely ground limestone, sand and shale, from the new 16,700 ton storage tanks is metered and transported to the top of the Preheater Tower where it enters the Flash Calcining Process. The Preheater consists of a series of four cyclones and a Flash Furnace in which the hot waste heat gases contact and heat the kiln feed prior to entering the kiln. The kiln feed from Stage III discharges into the Flash Furnace where fuel is burned to further increase the temperature. The Flash Furnace discharges to Stage IV where the final pre-

Medusa-Charlevoix Flash Calcining System

The fuel-fired Flash Furnace is the key to the effectiveness of the Medusa-Charlevoix Flash Calcining System. It maintains a temperature of approximately 1600 F. to accomplish rapid calcination of the raw meal (finely ground limestone, sand and shale) by removing up to 90% or more of the carbon dioxide (CO2) component.

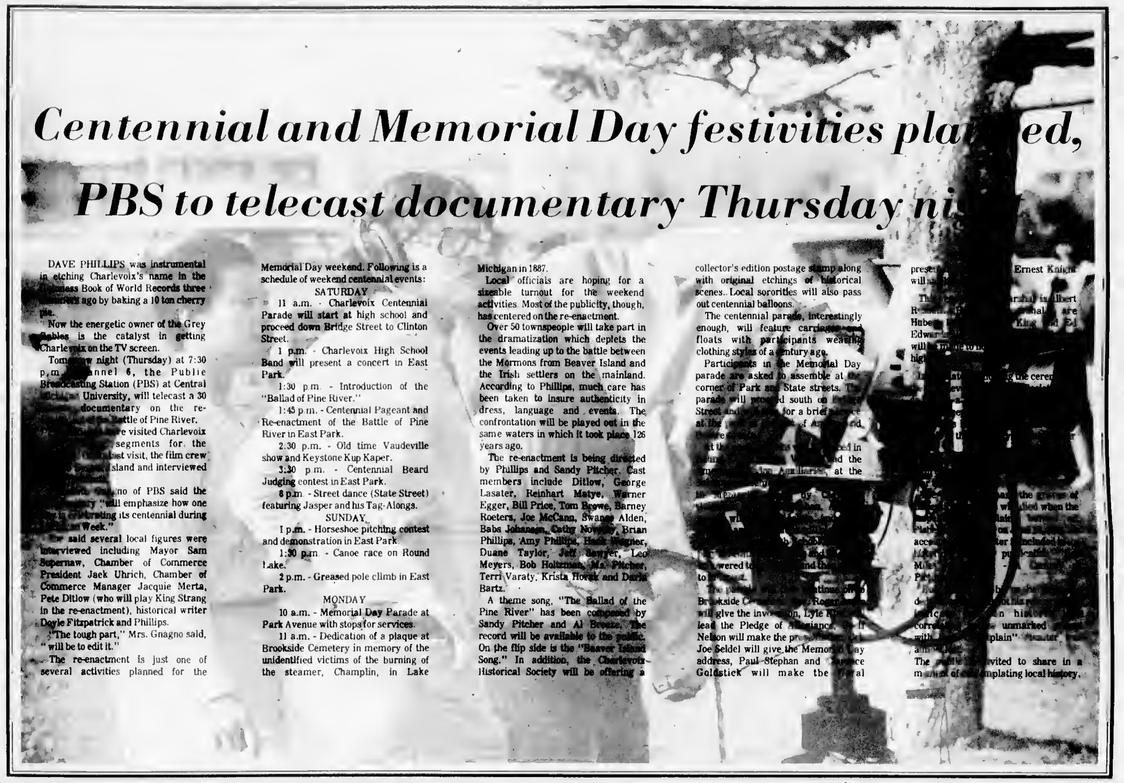
Centennial and Memorial Day festivities pla[illegible]ed, PBS to telecast documentary Thursday ni[illegible]



DAVE PHILLIPS was instrumental in etching Charlevoix's name in the Guinness Book of World Records three [illegible] ago by baking a 10 ton cherry pie.

Now the energetic owner of the Grey Gables is the catalyst in getting Charlevoix on the TV screen.

Tomorrow night (Thursday) at 7:30 p.m. Channel 6, the Public Broadcasting Station (PBS) at Central Michigan University, will telecast a 30 [illegible] documentary on the re-[illegible] of the Battle of Pine River.

[illegible]re visited Charlevoix [illegible] segments for the [illegible]st visit, the film crew [illegible]sland and interviewed

[illegible]no of PBS said the [illegible]y "will emphasize how one [illegible] is celebrating its centennial during [illegible] Week."

He said several local figures were interviewed including Mayor Sam Superman, Chamber of Commerce President Jack Uhrich, Chamber of Commerce Manager Jacquie Merta, Pete Ditlow (who will play King Strang in the re-enactment), historical writer Doyle Fitzpatrick and Phillips.

"The tough part," Mrs. Gnagno said, "will be to edit it."

The re-enactment is just one of several activities planned for the Memorial Day weekend. Following is a schedule of weekend centennial events:

SATURDAY

11 a.m. - Charlevoix Centennial Parade will start at high school and proceed down Bridge Street to Clinton Street.

1 p.m. - Charlevoix High School Band will present a concert in East Park.

1:30 p.m. - Introduction of the "Ballad of Pine River."

1:45 p.m. - Centennial Pageant and Re-enactment of the Battle of Pine River in East Park.

2:30 p.m. - Old time Vaudeville show and Keystone Kup Kaper.

3:30 p.m. - Centennial Beard Judging contest in East Park.

8 p.m. - Street dance (State Street) featuring Jasper and his Tag-Alongs.

SUNDAY

1 p.m. - Horseshoe pitching contest and demonstration in East Park.

1:30 p.m. - Canoe race on Round Lake.

2 p.m. - Greased pole climb in East Park.

MONDAY

10 a.m. - Memorial Day Parade at Park Avenue with stops for services.

11 a.m. - Dedication of a plaque at Brookside Cemetery in memory of the unidentified victims of the burning of the steamer, Champlin, in Lake Michigan in 1887.

Local officials are hoping for a sizeable turnout for the weekend activities. Most of the publicity, though, has centered on the re-enactment.

Over 50 townspeople will take part in the dramatization which depicts the events leading up to the battle between the Mormons from Beaver Island and the Irish settlers on the mainland. According to Phillips, much care has been taken to insure authenticity in dress, language and events. The confrontation will be played out in the same waters in which it took place 126 years ago.

The re-enactment is being directed by Phillips and Sandy Pilcher. Cast members include Ditlow, George Lasater, Reinhart Matye, Warner Egger, Bill Price, Tom Bowe, Barney Roeters, Joe McCann, Swanee Alden, Babs Johnson, Cathy Nowicki, Brian Phillips, Amy Phillips, Heidi Stiegler, Duane Taylor, Jeff Sawyer, Leo Meyers, Bob Holtzman, Ma[illegible] Pilcher, Terri Varaty, Krista Horak and Darsie Bartz.

A theme song, "The Ballad of the Pine River" has been composed by Sandy Pilcher and Al Breese. The record will be available to the public. On the flip side is the "Beaver Island Song." In addition, the Charlevoix Historical Society will be offering a collector's edition postage stamp along with original etchings of historical scenes. Local sororities will also pass out centennial balloons.

The centennial parade, interestingly enough, will feature carriages and floats with participants wearing clothing styles of a century ago.

Participants in the Memorial Day parade are asked to assemble at the corner of Park and State streets. The parade will proceed south on [illegible] Street and [illegible] for a brief [illegible] at the [illegible] of [illegible]rd.

Grant falls through, committee to organize drive

Stymied in its attempt to obtain grant money, the Park Stage Committee announced Wednesday that it will start soliciting funds in early July to pay for the proposed expansion of the stage in East Park. It is estimated the project will cost in the neighborhood of $100,000.

Clarence Odmark, president of the committee, said an attempt to secure $49,250 (50 percent of the estimated cost) in grant money from the Land and Water Conservation Fund was rejected because the city (the applicant for the funds) does not have a recreation plan.

According to Les Nichols of the DNR, a recreation plan is "required" from communities seeking funds from the Land and Water Conservation Fund.

Odmark did not close the door on getting grant assistance. He said there is a "possibility" of obtaining funds from the History Division of the Michigan Department of State. Funds could be derived, he said, if the project has historical significance.

Odmark said the fact that Charlevoix "has one of the oldest city supported bands in the state (dating back to the early 1900's)" may help in acquiring funds from the state.

Al Ranger, who was elected vice president of the committee, suggested the committee "encourage the city to develop a recreation plan" so the city can be eligible for grants in the future.

"We might be lucky," Ranger added. "We might be able to do this without any assistance."

The committee did agree to tentatively sponsor a country western concert on July 27.

Patty Muma, who has booked concerts in the past at Castle Farms, has lined up the Bellamy Brothers for the July 27 show. However, arrangements to use the high school football field (or the gymnasium if it rains) still must be worked out.

Mrs. Muma told the committee that the Bellamy Brothers will be on a concert tour of Michigan in July. The Bellamy Brothers currently have the No. 1 single on the country western charts called "If I said you had a beautiful body, would you hold it against me."

To open for the Bellamy Brothers, Mrs. Muma has booked a local band, Wes McCoy and North Country.

Any profit from the concert will be put in the park stage fund.

Mrs. Muma said the Charlevoix Chapter of the American Cancer Society made $2,500 last year by sponsoring a country western concert featuring Gary Shope. Shope will be performing here again June 1. Profits from that concert will again benifit the cancer society.

Council: Michigan Beach to be cleaned up June 2

Jim McGarry got what he wanted Monday night. A commitment from the Charlevoix City Council to help clean up the Michigan Beach area.

McGarry told council that Michigan Beach has been "neglected" and that the beach is littered with "trash and broken glass."

"I'm not asking council to spend any money," he said. "I'm just looking for a solid commitment from the city to help clean the beach area and to keep it clean."

Minutes later, council unanimously supported a voluntary clean up day on Saturday, June 2. The city will supply trash bags and a truck. McGarry, meanwhile, will be responsible for organizing the volunteer labor. He said Monday night he plans to solicit help from area service clubs.

McGarry said cleaning up the beach area is the "first hurdle." The next hurdle, he said, is to keep it maintained.

McGarry asked council about hiring a maintenance crew to clean the beach and park weekly.

Acting City Manager Jim Brinker said he is exploring the possibility of getting two Manpower employees to clean the park.

McGarry also suggested the road from the beach to the pump station be closed at night. The circle drive along the beach is a favorite gathering spot for local youth. But, according to McGarry and Chief of Police Jack Mol, it is also a dumping ground for trash, particularly booze bottles.

McGarry agreed Michigan's new bottle law should reduce the litter. On the other hand, Mol said with the drinking age at 21 it puts "the kids (who are under age but still drink) back in the cars."

"Ever since they closed Fisherman's Island we've had problems at Michigan Beach," he said.

Mol suggested the road be closed at Grant Street at 10 p.m. each night.

McGarry also asked council to consider three other steps to "assure an attractive and safe beach:"

1) Turf replacement along Park Avenue.

2) Eradication of poison ivy.

3) A firm commitment to follow through with a permanent plan of park maintenance.

Council recognized the need to rid the park of poison ivy and suggested the poison ivy be sprayed.

In other action, council:

- Agreed to reduce the speed limit in all city alleys to 10 mph. Speed limit signs will be phased in. The signs will first be posted on the alley that runs parallel to Dixon Avenue from Nichols to Nettleton Street. Also, stop signs will be erected where an alley and street intersect.
- Agreed to borrow $160,000 from Charlevoix County State Bank at 5.33 percent interest. Council agreed to pay the tax anticipation note by Sept. 1.
- Agreed to close State Street from Antrim to Mason streets for a dance Saturday, May 26 from 8 p.m. until 11 p.m.
- Approved a 10 percent raise for the city assessor (from $135 per week to $148).
- Approved a contract for the dockmaster ($187.50 per week from May 18 until Sept. 15).
- Agreed to have Gourdie, Fraser & Associates perform a harbor study. The study is to exclude test borings at this time.
- Heard a report on the city's financial status from Hill, Woodcock & Distel.
- Appointed Ken Staley and George Plumm to the Compensation Committee. Staley's term expires October, 1981. Plumm's expires October, 1980.
- Tabled a request from the owners of Charlee's to allow for the planting of trees in front of their Bridge Street stores.
- Tabled a request from WJML to hold a Hawaiian Tropic Weekend at Ferry Beach in July.
- Tabled bids on the barrier free renovation at the Michigan Beach bath house.

One of the most important features of our Flash Calciner Kiln System is the stability it brings to the operation. The separation of two processes, calcining and sintering, into two separate pieces of equipment fired independently, greatly improves the control of the total process.

Calcining in the new system takes place in a stationary vessel called a Flash Furnace. It is fired separately with separate control of the variables. The material leaves the flash calciner 85% to 90% calcined and enters the kiln.

Since the material in the kiln requires minimal, additional calcining, it moves through the kiln at a very uniform rate. Thus, the normal rushes and upsets in the kiln are eliminated. The firing in the kiln portion remains very constant, requiring small adjustments from the kiln burner.

It is during the periods of kiln rushes and upsets that most of the damage to kiln lining, clinker coolers, dust collectors, and conveying equipment takes place. Therefore, maintenance and in particular, brick failures are greatly reduced.

In papers written by Japanese cement producers, kiln brick consumption with the Flash Calciner is claimed to be less than one-half of that experienced in a similar Suspension Preheater Kiln.

Rising labor costs combined with the spiral of even more severe fuel costs dictated a drastic change in our Charlevoix manufacturing process. Government fuel efficiency guidelines and Medusa's own commitment to surpass existing environmental standards shaped the ultimate design of the new process.

Why Flash Calcining?

The Flash Calcining System was first developed in Japan in 1966. Today there are several U.S. plants using this system with more than twenty others in planning or design phases or under construction. Although many other plant and environmental improvements are underway at Charlevoix, the major manufacturing process change centers around the kiln conversion. Formerly, three processes occurred at the same time within our kiln. The preheat and drying process began as soon as the raw mix entered the kiln. As the temperature of the material rose above 1000°F, the material began to calcine. Calcine refers to a breakdown of the limestone or calcium carbonate ($CaCO_3$) into lime (CaO) and carbon dioxide (CO_2). This reaction requires tremendous amounts of energy and must occur before the lime can combine with other elements to form cement compounds. Approximately 40% of our present 580 ft. Charlevoix kiln is dedicated to this calcination. As the temperature in the kiln approaches 2200°F, the calcination is complete and all the CO_2 has been driven off. In our new process, 85% of the calcination takes place in the Flash Calcining process, enabling us to reduce the size of the kiln by 230 feet.

Our Flash Calciner Kiln System will be one of the world's most efficient fuel systems. The following comparison of fuel consumption for various kiln systems assumes that the kiln systems are operating with the same raw material. The raw materials are ideal and the kiln is at the proper equipped with chain systems or other fuel saving devices shown here near optimum.

Long Wet Kiln	6 M Btu's Ton
Long Dry Kiln	4 M Btu's Ton
Suspension Preheater Kiln	3 M Btu's Ton
Flash Calciner Kiln	2 M Btu's Ton

Why a $50 million Charlevoix Plant Conversion?

Prior to the Oil Embargo of 1973 cement plant efficiency was measured against labor consumption. Energy, while not ignored, was a secondary factor. For this reason, about 60% of the U.S. cement industry used the wet manufacturing process. It made blending simpler, material handling easier and eliminated drying of moist raw materials. Although the wet process consumed more fuel, cheap and plentiful energy offset these factors.

Labor was the most significant cost before the Oil Embargo. It cost more than fuel and power combined and was escalating rapidly to keep ahead of inflation. During this period the cement industry emphasized labor efficient plants and expanded capacity in an effort to control these spiraling unit labor costs.

However, in the fall of 1973, fuel and power cost started to climb at an even faster rate than labor cost. In addition to increased plant efficiency and capacity, Medusa-Charlevoix was now faced with identifying a manufacturing process that would reduce fuel consumption to the lowest possible level consistent with existing raw material chemical restraints. At the same time power consumption had to be held at current or reduced levels.

Above all other technical and economic considerations, the new process must not only meet all government environmental regulations, but create a comfortable safety margin of our Medusa-Charlevoix cement production along with other Michigan cement plants. This dependence locally and throughout Michigan will increase because of cement concrete's low cost due to plant and energy efficiency and the abundant nearby reserves of raw materials. The present Medusa-Charlevoix plant conversion combined with the long-range limestone and shale property acquisitions dating back to the 1920's, have ideally prepared Medusa-Charlevoix to serve Charlevoix and Michigan consumers with the world's least expensive yet most desirable building material HIGH QUALITY MEDUSA CEMENT CONCRETE

One hundred years ago, on May 26, 1879, President John S. Dixon of the Charlevoix Village Council appointed a number of standing committees. The names and activities of some of them have apparently been lost in history:

2. Licenses and printing.
3. Sanitary matters and police.
4. Gaming and immoralities.
5. Decorum and decoration.
6. Claims and finance.

$1,136 awarded for snowmobile program

Several Northern Michigan counties will receive reimbursements from the state for snowmobile safety programs they conducted in 1978, state Rep. Steve Andrews (R-Wolverine) announced today.

"The state feels that snowmobiling, one of the state's fastest growing sports, should be a safe winter activity," Andrews said, "so they have decided to pay for the majority of the costs of conducting these safety programs.

"I am pleased that every county I represent chose to become involved in a safety program for snowmobilers and will now receive the money promised them by the state," he added.

Andrews said that the counties will receive their reimbursement for 75 percent of the cost of their individual programs, as follows:

Alpena	$2,043.00
Antrim	1,687.96
Charlevoix	1,136.72
Cheboygan	2,561.03
Montmorency	2,202.76
Otsego	1,297.23
Presque Isle	3,195.45

He added that the state money will be mailed to county treasurers or other appropriately designated officials by June 1.

I'm a Customer Service Representative at a Consumers Power payment counter. And since I see heating bills everyday, I know how they go up and down like Michigan's temperature. But you don't have to wait from one month to the next to find out what your bill is going to be.

With our Equal Monthly Payment Plan, you can have the same bill in winter and summer. Here's how it works. We'll average your yearly bill, then divide it into 12 equal payments. Once a year your account will be balanced for over or under payment.

The Equal Monthly Payment Plan won't save you money, but it will help you in planning your budget. Call Consumers Power Company and ask for the Equal Monthly Payment Plan. It sure works well for me.

The art exhibits also will be on display during school hours - 9 a.m. until 3 p.m. - on Friday, May 25; Tuesday, May 29; and Wednesday, May 30.

The theme of this year's show, featuring art talent from the elementary, middle school and high school, is "I'd pick more daisies."

On exhibit will be a giant air sculpture environment, body painting, color environment, rubber stamp art, graffiti board, caricature drawings, paris craft face masks, clown make-up, a student filmstrip and sculpture work influenced by the "artist in the schools" program (Todd Warner).

Board accepts Stutzman's resignation

The Charlevoix Board of Edueation, at its regular meeting Monday, voted to borrow against antieipated taxes, heard a brief report regarding the proposed addition to the high school, accepted a resignation and approved the school calendar for the 1979-80 year among other items on the agenda.

The board voted to borrow $890,000 against anticipated taxes until tax monies become available. Bids will be opened at a July meeting.

The board accepted, with regrets, the resignation of Gary L. Stutzman who has been with the music department of the school system since September 1970 and who has headed the program in recent years. He is leaving the teaching profession to go into sales. His resignatim will be effective July 30.

William Kane of the firm of Jackson Manson & Kane addressed the board briefly on the progress being made in preparation for the completion of plans and the letting of bids for the bonds. He said the company had been able to trim several weeks from the tentative work schedule and that at the present rate, bids should be let by the week of October 1.

According to the school calendar which has been approved by the board and the Charlevoix Education Association, the school calendar will be as follows: Sept. 4, first day of teachers; Sept. 5, first day of school; Sept. 26, District-wide Inservice Day; Nov. 22-23, Thanksgiving; Dec. 21, last day pre-Christmas; Jan. 2, return post-hristmas; Jan. 25, Teacher work day (end of the semester) High School and Middle School teachers only; March 24-28, Spring break; April 4, Good Friday (½ day); May 26, Memorial Day; June 5, last day of school (half day for students, full day for teachers).

Two evenings in October or November will be scheduled for Parent-Teacher conferences by Sept. 30 with the scheduling to be done by building teachers and administrators; In addition, the elementary building will schedule one day in February of March for conferences.

Elementary teachers will have an additional six hours of Parent Teacher Conferences which will be scheduled by the K-5 staff and administration by Sept. 30.

The board also increased substitute teachers pay from $27 to $30 per day, effective at once. In discussing the issue, it was brought out that Charlevoix is at the bottom of the pay scale for substitute teachers and that it is becoming increasingly difficult to find good substitutes.

The salary for the yearbook advisor was set at $800 with the work to be done after school hours; $500 is to be paid from the general fund and the remainder from advertising receipts.

At the recommendation of the Citizen's Task Force, it was decided by the board not to engage a construction management firm for the high school building addition at this time.

Staffing was discussed briefly but no decision made. It was decided to wait until a study had been made of anticipated enrollment figures and of present personnel.

Vincent Olach advised the board that the Building Trades house was nearing completion and recommended that the house be offered for sale at a minimum of $42,000 without floor covering.

Mrs. Pat Sherman of the Public Library Advisory Board was present to make the board's recommendation of the school board. The board, composed of Mrs. Sherman, Mrs. Charles Duerr, John Hess, Jan McKay and Arthur Riley, was presented by-laws for the board's approval and proposed that it serve as a liasion between the public and the board in behalf of the library.

Band gets first division rating at Holland

The Charlevoix High School Marching band including its flag and rifle corps received a first division rating for its field performance competition during the 50th annual Tulip Festival at Holland Saturday the director, Gary Stutzman, said following the group's return home Sunday.

The Charlevoix band was one of six Class B bands among the 12 bands entered in the competition. All bands with the exception of the Charlevoix aggregation were from southern and southwestern Michigan.

Stutzman said the competition was held in a down-pour of rain which continued until approximately 6 p.m. when the parade ended.

The Charlevoix band was among more than 50 bands in the parade which boasted a total of 275 entries. There were six divisions in the parade. Charlevoix was assigned to the fourth section. Stutzman said that the parade started at 3 p.m. and the last entry left its position at 5:30 p.m.

While in Holland, the band was housed and fed at Hope College where all bands that stayed overnight were assigned.

The Charlevoix Band Boosters financed the trip to the Tulip Festival.

The Charlevoix band is scheduled to appear in the Centennial parade here on Saturday and in the Memorial Day parade on Monday, Stutzman said.

The Symphony band will appear concert at the Charlevoix High School gymnasium on June 5.

DSS handles complaints

The Charlevoix County Department of Social Services is required to announce its responsibility to receive and investigate complaints regarding adults in licensed adult foster care homes, homes for the aged, and nursing care facilities.

Complaints may range from minor problems such as inappropriate meal schedule to major problems involving physical abuse of residents.

When these complaints are received by the local Department of Social Services they are investigated by the adult foster care worker. An evaluation is made to determine the degree of risk and appropriate action.

Any person having knowledge of such conditions involving a resident of a licensed facility for adults is urged to call the Charlevoix County Department of Social Services at 547-4471.

Stop distributing 'racist' posters, DNR tells SGN members

The Michigan Department of Natural Resources (DNR) has asked a group of sport fishermen, who are opposed to gill net fishing, to stop distributing posters, that the DNR says, depicts Indians as "wanted."

According to the attorney general's office, the posters are not illegal, but they are in "bad taste."

One of the posters, distributed by the Stop Gill Netting (SGN) organization, offers a $100 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of those using gill nets to tangle fish. The word "wanted" appears on the poster.

Another poster says "Help make gill netters an endangered species." The poster includes a photo taken by a DNR biologist showing Indians fishing in the northern Great Lakes.

Indian leaders and state officials have termed the posters "racist."

An SGN spokesman, however, said the posters were not meant as a racial insult.

Dave Juillerat said the posters were carefully worded to avoid racial slurs.

"We specifically refer only to gill netters," he told the Associated Press. "The posters do not refer to Indians at all."

Juillerat said the posters have been distributed to hotels, restaurants and bait and tackle shops.

The DNR in a letter to the SGN said it requests that no further use of the photo be made by your organization, that you stop distribution of the poster in question immediately and that you destroy all remaining posters bearing that photograph."

The warning was issued, said a DNR official, "to make sure there was no problem with someone interpreting them as our endorsement of the SGN group."

Two weeks ago Federal District Court Judge Noel Fox upheld Indian fishing rights in a landmark court ruling. The state is appealing the decision.

Said Attorney General Frank Kelley:

"In the case of United States of America v State of Michigan, the federal government has successfully persuaded the court that the present-day descendants of the Ottawa and Chippewa Indians who signed the Treaty of 1836 are exempt from all laws of the state while fishing in the waters of the Great Lakes," Kelley said.

"This is the most far-reaching Indian rights decision in American jurisprudence," Kelley said. "However, we must remember that we are a nation that is governed by the rule of law and not the rule of men. Therefore, this decision must be obeyed and honored.

"This decision by a local federal judge is the most recent major interpretation by a federal court concerning these treaties in many decades," Kelley said. "And since negotiation of these treaties was commenced by the federal government and the original Indian tribes at a time prior to Michigan becoming a state, a full and complete review should be made at the highest appellate federal level.

"With regard to any recent conflicting state court decision," Kelley stated, "a federal court ruling would take precedence over the same in the interpretation of federal treaties. No state court opinion at this time would change the basic federal ruling that Michigan does not have the right to restrict commercial fishing by Indians.

"I am, therefore, appealing the decision so there can be no misunderstanding of the legal rights that were originally created by the federal government and the Indians.

"Since the State of Michigan was not a signator to these treaties," Kelley noted, "I believe it significant to point out that the United States Congress is the one body outside of the courts which has the power to renegotiate, modify or actually abrogate these treaties.

"I therefore, call upon the Michigan delegation in Congress, as well as the entire United States Congress, to immediately begin studying this problem which has already caused chaos and confusion in other states such as the State of Washington.

"Any citizen who has views on this subject should immediately direct his or her comments to their respective Congressman. Sportsmen's groups, tribal councils and other organized groups – who likewise have honest concerns in this matter – should direct their concern to members of Congress."

The appeal through the courts could take anywhere from two to five years, Kelley said, during which time there could be irreparable damage to aquatic life in the Great Lakes and throughout the nation – to mention nothing of the bitterness and confusion that could arise.

Kelley said: "As this state's chief law enforcement officer, I call upon the federal government to assist the state in these troubled times which lie ahead. The recent violence in the State of Washington following a similar – but far less significant – Indian fishing decision must not be repeated here," Kelley said.

"Since the federal decision suspends and abrogates the state's right to regulate the rights of the affected Indians to fish and use the waters within our state, we no longer have the power to adequately protect the aquatic resources.

"Although there is a possibility that the Indians may abuse the exemption from state laws given to them by the federal court and deplete our resources, the citizens of this state should not resort to violence. Any person who unlawfully attempts to interfere with the exercise of rights granted to the Indians by the court faces the prospect of criminal prosecution by federal, state or local law enforcement agencies," Kelley emphasized.

"We, therefore, would require the assistance of the Federal government to assist the state in protecting the federal Indian citizens in exercising their granted Federal right to fish as construed by the federal court.

"The Department of Interior is needed to ensure that federally-endangered species legislation is enforced with regard to those species which are in danger but which Michigan no longer has the power to protect."

Kelley concluded: "While the decision is under appeal, I want everyone – Indians and non-Indians alike – to know that we will do our best to honor the court's decision and maintain order."

Gardens and tourists

Northern Michigan's weekend gardeners have suffered another setback in their long trek toward bountiful harvests.

I wish now that I had kept track of the weather since the first of the year, because it is now becoming obvious that we have entered a five-and-two weather cycle – five days of passable weather followed by two days of rotten weather. And the two bad days always fall on weekends.

This weekend I had planned to finish spading the garden, transplanting raspberries and rhubarb, putting in beans, carrots, beets, potatoes and zucchini, sculpturing the shoulders of the front walk for flowers and cutting the grass.

Of course, none of it got done after Friday night's torrential rains which left Charlevoix cold and muddy. Then Saturday and Sunday, whenever it appeared as though the sun might break through, rain squalls and icy fog would rush in from Lake Michigan.

But we shouldn't feel too bad. The long, cold spring has delayed farm and garden work across the state.

We really haven't had too much rain, but the spacing of the rainstorms has been such that the ground hasn't had a chance to dry out and warm up. Until it does, gardening will just have to wait.

Traveling with a pre-schooler

It has been a few years since I've had to travel with a preschooler but those days are forever in my mind. One doesn't live through travel capers with kids and forget it easily. In fact I'm beginning to notice some similarities between traveling with teenagers and preschoolers.

A family trip or vacation is often seen as a mixed blessing. How many of us have said, "Now I need a vacation to rest up from the vacation." But Stop! Before you become completely discouraged and give up a family vacation all together – there are a few life saving suggestions you can put into practice.

An approved car seat can work wonders on your nervous system. Not only will it protect your child, but it will also keep him or her in one place. If you always use the care seat it will become a habit with your child.

We tend to "dry out" traveling, due to the car heater or changing climate. This can be particularly true of infants - so offer additional liquids during the trip.

We all like to have something "familiar" with us and children are no different. A bag of favorite toys and some cuddlies will help provide familiar comfort in strange surroundings. Also, as your travel change the scenery. Since most car seats face backwards, place a colorful blanket or towel, or even a favorite drawing or map on the seat back for a little variety.

Traveling with a preschooler means some travel rules. Once they're made stick to them! Some suggestions include: use quiet voices (yours too!), dropped toys may be picked up only at rest areas (or you'll be buckling and unbuckling often). Have a "quiet time" each day or every 2 hours for 5 to 10 minutes, so everyone can relax. And always have a few tricks up your sleeve, such as games, magic slates, snacks, etc.

You can avoid "I wanna..." battles at souvenir shops by giving children an allowance to spend at their discretion. Let them know that once it's gone there is no more.

A small lap tray, bed table, available for about a dollar, is very valuable for travel. It provides a nice space for children to play or draw.

Meal time is a good time for stretch and exercise. Picnics are best for allowing freedom to run and explore. Travel picnics can be simple – stop at a small town grocery and pick up supplies or offer peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, fruit and an instant juice drink.

A little planning ahead can make traveling with preschoolers fun. You won't ever have to take a vacation to recover from your vacation!

Salt, with a little pepper

WASHINGTON – After the automatic but fleeting image of the white substance we use on our food, SALT, to most Americans, means an agreement with the Soviets which hopefully will protect this country and prevent horrible war, a slowing of the foolish strategic arms race, and the possibility of holding down defense spending.

The Carter Administration argues that ratification of SALT II will meet these hopes, with the probable exception of keeping defense costs in line. A collection of national security interest groups, and a fair number of the senators whose votes decide, are skeptical, and want the treaty rejected. So the issue is drawn.

SALT I was ratified in 1972. We debate SALT II. SALT III is in the works. They are turned out like production models, but their content is as complicated as medieval theology. We are lost in a world of throw-weights, telemetering and sublimits. Former Defense Secretary Melvin Laird told me the other day that it might be necessary for the Soviets to be allowed to install a monitoring facility in the U.S., and that we have one on their soil. Egads, are the superpowers allowing each other Trojan Horses in their camps?

Years ago, when I covered the late Nelson A. Rockefeller's speeches, I developed the acronym, BOMFOG, to save writing, "Brotherhood of Man under the Fatherhood of God." But with SALT I (Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty), the outmoded MAD (Mutual Assured Destruction) and FIOD (Functionally Related Observable Differences), is 1984 here already? Dr. Strangelove was a primitive.

Since Strangelove, the Soviets and the U.S. have developed hundreds of billions in fantastic weaponry, enough to blow us all up an indecent number of times. The Soviets, who can't get enough of it, still, are anxious for SALT II. Soviet Leader Brezhnev, whose health slips like FDR's did in World War II, wants the treaty to help immortalize himself, and because he knows his people and their Communist comrades abroad want it. Besides, the Soviets lose nothing in SALT II.

President Carter needs SALT II because he can't afford a major political defeat, and he also knows without it, the arms race will go on expensively and recklessly.

So his administration argues across the Republic that: SALT II does not insure Soviet strategic superiority over the U.S.; the negotiation process was even more careful than that followed by Nixon-Kissinger in 1972; U.S. verification techniques, and not the Soviet's word, will ensure compliance; the treaty will slow the Soviet's program of speeding up development of even more weapons; Soviet-U.S. relations will improve with SALT II; and, "Skeptics will be pleasantly surprised."

The charts give skeptics reason to argue. The Soviet lines denoting delivery vehicles, strategic warheads/bombs, missile launchers and the rest, have climbed and passed those of the U.S. in many instances in the past 10 years. The Soviets have nuclear parity with the U.S. We have slowed or stopped development of many weapons, and lost our listening posts in Iran.

The rhetoric of those who fret over national security, and that of the Far Right as well, sees SALT II as verification of the U.S. resigning itself to being Number Two. Extend this notion, and there is surrender of the U.S. to the Soviets across the globe. In short, the Soviets win without firing a shot.

So there is considerable opposition in the Senate to SALT II, particularly from Republicans. Minority Leader Howard Baker leans against it. Presidential aspirant Bob Dole wants SALT II, but only after certain questions are cleared up. The Far Right fights it.

Mel Laird, a major congressional witness on SALT I, says SALT II will be ratified, but only after certain amendments are tacked on, qualifiers the Carter Administration says it won't take.

"Every American should be for SALT II," Laird, a G.O.P. stalwart, says. "But we've got to remove the treaty's prohibition against our cruise missiles. Our European allies need this protection.

"We also need better guarantees of verification. We lost Iran, and we need listening posts.

"And we can't ignore the Soviet Backfire bomber. It can land without refueling in Cuba, and yet it is exempted from being counted. Our B-52, an ancient plane now, is not exempted. We can't settle this with side agreements. They are a lot of (expletive). The Soviets only follow the main text."

The upcoming Senate debate could center on Laird's proposed amendments. He is a shrewd counter of the beans in the strategic arms game. Senators like John Glenn and Henry Jackson – Democrats – probably share Laird's views.

In the meantime, as Amron H. Katz, a witty expert in the Dr. Strangelove game, observes: "We must recast Teddy Roosevelt's, 'Speak softly and carry a big stick,' to, 'Listen carefully and carry a long focal-length camera.'"

Sunset legislation

The Senate took a major step towards making state government more efficient and accountable by approving legislation establishing the innovative "Sunset" concept in Michigan.

In its pure form, sunset is a concept that requires the automatic review of every state department, agency or program by the Legislature over eight year cycles.

The bill establishes a Joint Legislative Review Committee to review all agencies and departments in detail to assess their value, whether or not they are accomplishing their goals, and if they are operating in an efficient and accountable manner.

If the committee feels that an agency is doing a good job, it can recommend that the agency continue to function for another eight-year period. If the committee feels that some changes need to be made, then can introduce legislation to modify the department's structure or method of doing business. If they deem it necessary, the committee can require another review of the department in a year or two to make sure that the necessary changes have been implemented. If the committee feels that a department has outlived it's usefulness and is no longer needed, they can introduce legislation to eliminate that department.

I voted for an amendment to the bill that would have required termination dates for each department or agency because I felt that this would have provided more incentive for thorough review of state government. Although this amendment was not adopted, this legislation will still begin to crack down on a state bureaucracy that is now out of control.

For too long, state bureaucrats have implemented programs and legislation with little or no accountability to the people who pay their salary: the taxpayers of Michigan. This lack of review has led to wasteful spending, duplication of services and a maze of red tape.

In my judgment, enactment of this sunset legislation is a step in the right direction in order to bring our state bureaucracy under control and make sure that it is properly serving the people of northern Michigan.

The bill now goes to the State House for further discussion and debate. I anticipate that the bill will be approved in the House and signed into law by the Governor.

With this increased legislative scrutiny of state agencies, I am optimistic we will again have a government that is truly for the people.

Mitch Irwin is the state senator in the 37th district.

1st budget bill reported

The $1.5 billion K-12 school aid budget increasing guaranteed pupil income for districts levying 30 mills by 9.2 percent was reported from the House Appropriations Committee last week. This bill is the first 1979-80 budget bill to go before the full House. It is $73 million over last year's budget and $26 million over the Governor's recommendation.

The school aid formula contained in the new bill provides a basic $320 payment per student with a guaranteed yield of $43 for every mill levied up to 30 mills and an additional $43 for every two mills levied above that. The current formula is based on a $274 payment plus $40 for each mill up to 30. The new formula increases school aid payments by 9.2 percent.

For those districts which may be forced to roll back their millage rates under the new Headlee amendment, the bill contains a guaranteed support level. It would provide 105 percent of last year's per pupil allowance. This guarantee differs from the Governor's recommendation that payments be made as if rollbacks did not occur.

For instance, if a district levying 30 mills had to roll back to 29 mills, the schools would be paid as if the district were still at the 30 mill rate, under the Governor's plan.

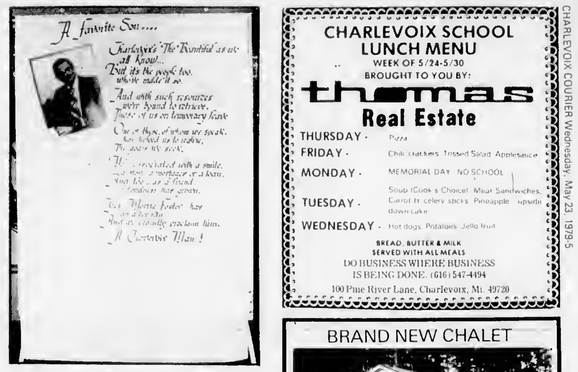
The committee defeated an amendment by Representative Gary Owen to strike out the $21 million earmarked for schools with declining enrollment.

My colleagues Representatives Bob Law of Livonia and Dave Campbell of Clawson offered an amendment to increase the appropriation of $23 million. It was turned down primarily because of a present budget overage in other areas. But they intend to submit it once again to help schools with declining enrollments.

The present bill also permits schools with increasing enrollment to take full advantage of increased student count in the first quarter. This could potentially provide these schools with an additional $350,000.

The bill to be considered by the full House includes $131 million for special education, an increase of $9 million from last year; $102 million for transportation, up from $93 million; $29.5 million for vocational education, an increase of $3 million, and $4.5 million for bilingual education, an increase of $500,000.

Ralph Ostling represents the 103rd district in the House of Representatives.



Mick Smith, local photographer, and Fritz Allard have drafted a large greeting card for M.J. Foster, executive vice president and director of Charlevoix County State Bank, which is on display at the main office of the bank. Foster has been ill since December 19, 1978. The bank invites the many friends of "Morrie" to drop in and sign the card so it can be presented to him.

Hospital Guild celebrates 25th birthday

The Women's Guild of the Charlevoix Area Hospital will observe its twenty-fifth birthday on June 3.

Though the Guild has only been in existence for a quarter of a century, its membership will join the community in the observance of Charlevoix's Centennial celebration this weekend. Mrs. William Squire of Boyne City, Guild president, has announced.

The Guild came into being at the time the present Charlevoix Area Hospital was opened in 1954. Through that quarter of a century, the Guild has conducted thrift sales, fashion shows, kitchen tours, sewing bees, raffles, candy and bake sales, home sales and countless other ventures to raise funds for numerous projects and equipment for the hospital. During these years volunteers have given countless hours of service in the hospital itself. The Guild is presently working to fulfill its $5,000 pledge to the Hospital Expansion campaign. This is being done mainly through the operation of the Showcase, a gift shop conducted by the Guild at the Charlevoix Area Hospital.

Twenty-five women attended the organizational meeting of the Guild on June 3, 1954. Ten of the original 25 are still active members of the organization. Others have earned the right to retire from active participation while others have moved from the community. Four of the 25 are deceased.

But, like any volunteer group, the Guild is always seeking new memberships – new people with new ideas. "This is the life blood of any organization" Mrs. Squire said. As part of its participation in the Charlevoix Centennial observance, the Guild will conduct a drive for new members as well as a bake sale in East Park on Saturday.

Other Guild officers are Mrs. Jackson Beatty, president-elect; Mrs. L. T. Rountree, secretary and Mrs. Eleanor Schultz, a charter member, treasurer.

Gallagher, Scheid descendents meet

A re-union for descendents of W.J. Gallagher, Sr., and John W. Scheid was held recently in Chicago.

The re-union party was hosted by the Rev. Father Bernard Gallagher Scheid and the Rev. Father Bruce Scheid Lardie.

Mrs. Fred (Martha Gallagher) Zalusky of Ludington reports on the re-union as follows:

"Father Scheid and Father Lardie entertained all relatives by blood and marriage, also children. We had a one o'clock mass at Rev. Scheid's St. Kevin's Church. All returned to his hall, where we took pictures and visited. All had a good time. Some had old pictures. It was sure fun to see how all looked years ago. There was also music if you wanted to dance. Later, Rev. Scheid had a dinner catered in.

"Rev. Father Bruce Lardie was from Ludington. His mother, Margaret Scheid, from Manistee, Rev. Father Bernard Scheid, Father Will, from Manistee. His mother, Girlie Gallagher, from Beaver Island. Father Scheid was born on Beaver Island. Martha Gallagher Zalusky, also from Beaver Island.

Rayders and Saints split doubleheader

Scott Morgan tossed a two hitter Monday afternoon as Charlevoix's baseball team broke a three game losing streak with a 15-0 whitewash of St. Ignace in the second game of a doubleheader.

St. Ignace had won the first game 11-8.

In the opener, Charlevoix outhit the Saints 10-7 as Scott Kelly, Roxy VanLoo and Gil Noirot banged out two hits each. But the fact Charlevoix outhit the Saints mattered little in the end. Jerry Sladek was the losing pitcher.

The Rayders really woke up in the second game scoring 15 runs on 13 hits. Noirot led the charge with three hits while Jim Buchanan, Phil Morrison, Bob Russell and Jack Carlson all had two.

On Friday, Charlevoix dropped a pair to Rogers City, 4-0 and 1-0. The Rayders managed just two hits in the two contests - both coming in the opener off Mark Pilarski. Neil Grulke tossed a no-hitter in the nightcap. Mike Loper was the losing pitcher in game one while Morgan took the loss in game two.

Drenth, Williams and relay team in finals

Jeff Drenth, Todd Williams and the 880 relay team of Williams, Rich Russell, Barney Way and Jack Cross have qualified for the state Class C track and field finals June 2.

Drenth captured a first place in the Class C regional Friday by running the two mile race in 10.20.8. Williams was third in the low hurdles and the relay time took second.

The Rayders will compete in the Petoskey Kiwanis Boys Relays Tuesday night. A week ago Tuesday, the Rayders captured only four of 16 firsts in a dual meet at Gaylord and fell victim to the Blue Devils 88-34.

Chris Jones qualifies for state meet

Charlevoix placed fifth in the Class C division of the Petoskey Kiwanis Girls Relays Monday night.

The Rayders 440 relay team of Tanya Ford, Marie Buday, Chris Jones and Cris Culbertson took a first place with a time of 54.6. That same combination placed fourth in the sprint medley.

Charlevoix finished with 14 points. St. Ignace won the division with 48 points.

Meanwhile on Friday, Jones qualified for the state meet on June 2 by setting a new record in the long jump in a Class C regional. She had a jump of 17'3". No other Rayders qualified for the state meet.

On Tuesday the Rayders had lost to Gaylord 59-40.

The Rayders tallied 25 points to nip Glen Lake who finished with 22. East Jordan took third with 15 points and Boyne City was sixth with six points.

"The team did a grand job in defeating some outstanding players," said jubilant Coach Chuck Wright afterwards.

Wright said his team showed great conditioning and character by hanging on to win the regional. The Rayders had played three teams - in matches that went to three sets each time - prior to the regional.

In the No. 1 singles, Charlevoix's Mark Lignell lost to Joe Gillen of Glen Lake 6-4 and 7-5. Lignell had beaten the No. 1 seed Tom Coates of Elk Rapids 6-4 and 6-2 in the semi-finals.

In the No. 2 doubles, Geoff Nelson and Ed Engstrom of Charlevoix beat Dave Galla and Laura Wiesen of Glen Lake 6-2, 3-6 and 6-3.

In the No. 3 doubles, Rick Rajewski and Jim Fowler of Charlevoix nipped Steve Drenth and Dan Goebel of East Jordan 6-4, 2-6 and 6-3.

Overall, Charlevoix reached the finals in six of seven events.

Win streak snapped, but Rayders rebound

Central Lake scored an 8-5 softball victory over Charlevoix Monday afternoon in the first game of a doubleheader to snap the Rayders five game winning streak.

The Rayders bounced back and won the nightcap, 14-8.

In the opener, Central Lake had eight runs on 13 hits while Charlevoix had five runs on seven hits. Tracy Burns was the winning pitcher. Melinda Klooster took the loss.

Judy Hopp had three hits for the winners including a home run while Teresa Noirot and Holly Taber had two hits each for Charlevoix.

The Rayders broke loose it the second contest scoring 14 runs on 10 hits. Jackie Paul, Chris Lehman, Sherrie Selissen and Noirot all collected two hits each. Hopp once again paced Central Lake with two hits including a home run.

Taber picked up the pitching victory while Burns suffered the loss.

Charlevoix will open pre-district tournament play here on Friday against Onaway.

Davenport new AD at Ferris

Charlevoix High School graduate Dean Davenport has been named athletic director at Ferris State College.

Davenport, a former summer recreation director here, succeeds Herbert Peterson who will become commissioner of the Great Lakes Conference. Davenport's mother, Marge, resides in Charlevoix.

The 44-year-old Davenport has worn many hats since his arrival at Ferris in 1970 and in his previous assignments in college and high school coaching, administration, and teaching. Since July, 1977, Davenport has been Acting Division Chairman for Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Athletics.

"Dean has shown exemplary leadership in his roll as Acting Division Chairman," cited Ferris President Robert L. Ewigleben, who made the announcement of Davenport's selection. "As athletic director he will have responsibility for the athletic program, intramurals, Ferris' athletic facilities, and the further development of facilities. We've come a long way in the development of our athletics and once the effects of our tuition waiver program for athletes is felt, we feel we will continue to become more commpetitive.

In the announcement of Davenport as Athletic Director, Ewigleben also praised the leadership of Dr. Marilyn Clark who will continue as the Department Head for Health, Physical Education and Recreation, a role in which she has served since 1975. That department represents one of Ferris' more rapidly growing areas.

Davenport has served as an assistant coach in basketball and football at Ferris as well as stints as Athletic Coordinator, Coordinator of Recreation Administration, and Associate Professor of Health, Physical Education and Recreation.

While as Ferris' assistant basketball coach, Davenport led junior varsity teams to a five-year 52-23 record. He also assisted the Bulldog varsity under head coach Jim Wink from 1970-1977 to a record of 137-56, and two Great Lakes Conference and NAIA District 23 titles.

Prior to the past nine years when Davenport has worn a "Ferris hat" he had many varied experiences throughout the nation. A 1957 Central Michigan University graduate where he was a member of the Chippewa basketball team, Davenport served as an assistant basketball coach at CMU from 1960-61 while earning his master's degree in Education and Physical Education. High school coaching positions included Petoskey (1957-59), Grant (1959-60), and Traverse City (1961-63).

Davenport's professional travels also have taken him to California-Northridge where he served as assistant basketball coach (1963-66) and Iowa Wesleyan College serving as Athletic Director and coaching basketball and golf (1967-70). Davenport's Iowa Wesleyan teams compiled a 64-28 record and went undefeated in taking three consecutive Prairie Conference titles. He was named the State of Iowa Small College "Coach of the Year" in 1970.

Davenport and his wife, Joyce, have three children: Chris who is a student at Central Michigan, Terry who is a junior at Ferris State College, and Jodi at Big Rapids High School.

New Improved Services for Charlevoix Customers

Beginning Thursday, May 24, new electronic telephone office equipment will go into operation providing new long distance service for customers in the 547 exchange.

New long distance service. Now you can dial person-to-person, collect, credit card and bill-to-third-number calls. Even from coin phones.

Here's how it works:

Within your 616 Area: Dial 0 (operator) plus the number you want to reach.

Outside your 616 Area: Dial 0 (operator) plus the Area Code and the phone number.

In either case, an operator (assisted by high-speed computer) will intercept your call and ask, "May I help you?"

Dialing person-to-person calls. Simply tell the operator the name of the person you're calling.

Dialing collect calls. Just answer, "Collect," and give your name.

Dialing credit card calls. Give the operator your credit card number.

Air Force base trains, evaluates combat capability of bomber crews

Lt. Col. Robert Rajewski is commander of Detachment 6, 1st Combat Evaluation Group of the Air Force, located in Bay Shore. This week the Courier talks with him about the installation.

COURIER: What is the purpose of your group?

RAJEWSKI: To train and evaluate the combat capability of bomber crews.

COURIER: How is this done?

RAJEWSKI: The planes that fly over us are theoretically enemy planes. They try to bomb us and we provide defensive threats, surface to air missiles. When they score hits, we record them. Of course, the planes don't carry bombs. Everything is done electronically.

COURIER: How many planes come your way each day?

RAJEWSKI: On a busy day, they come about every 15 minutes. We have two shifts. The day shift usually runs from 12 to 5 and the night shift from 9 to 1.

COURIER: Where do the planes come from?

RAJEWSKI: From SAC bases all over, also some from the Royal Air Force once in a while.

COURIER: What kinds of planes are they?

RAJEWSKI: B 52's and FB 111's, sometimes British Vulcans. Occasionally in the summer we get fighters flown by reserve units.

COURIER: How many men do you have at your station?

RAJEWSKI: We're authorized for 76, but at the moment we're a few short.

COURIER: Any women?

RAJEWSKI: One. She came just a few days ago, the first woman we've ever had. She's an Airman Basic, working as a clerk-typist.

COURIER: How many officers do you have?

RAJEWSKI: Three. Lieutenant colonel, major and second lieutenant.

COURIER: Do you have living and dining facilities at the base?

RAJEWSKI: No, and we don't have a commissary or recreational facilities except for a small hobby shop. However, we have had organized softball, basketball, and volleyball teams.

COURIER: Where do your men live?

RAJEWSKI: In all the towns in the area – Charlevoix, Petoskey, Boyne City, Bay Shore, Horton Bay, some as far away as Harbor Springs and Boyne Falls.

COURIER: What's the average time a man stays at Bay Shore?

RAJEWSKI: Maybe about four years. We have both career men and those on first or second term enlistments. Our men are a select group, well trained technicians.

COURIER: Are there other similar Air Force installations?

RAJEWSKI: There are 11 statewide sites and three overseas, in Germany, Guam, and Korea.

COURIER: How long have you been in operation at Bay Shore?

RAJEWSKI: Since 1963, but the site was started in Guam, then moved to Ironwood. We came down here from Ironwood. We're one of the smaller detachments in the Air Force. We're away from other military installations and rely on local people for every-day support. We contract out our services and buy a lot.

COURIER: How long have you been at Bay Shore?

RAJEWSKI: Since early December. It's a change for me because I've always been used to a larger base. But here I know all the men by name, as well as all their problems.

COURIER: Where were you stationed before you came here?

RAJEWSKI: In Rome, New York. Before that I served at Castle Air Force Base in California, at Wurtsmith Air Force Base in Oscoda, at K.I. Sawyer in Marquette, and at Walker Air Force Base in New Mexico.

COURIER: Where did you grow up?

RAJEWSKI: On a small farm east of Bay City. I went to high school at St. John's in Essexville, then to Michigan State and majored in packaging technology. I also took ROTC and joined the Air Force right after graduation. I enjoyed it, so decided to make a career of it.

COURIER: Where do you live?

RAJEWSKI: In Charlevoix, buy my wife and two of the five boys are still in Rome. We've been trying to sell our house, but they'll be here at the end of the school year.

COURIER: Where are the boys in school?

RAJEWSKI: Next year John and Paul will be at MSU and Robert at Michigan Tech. Richard is at Charlevoix High School, and Pat will be in the elementary school.

COURIER: Do you like Charlevoix?

RAJEWSKI: Yes, everybody has been friendly and helpful. We appreciate the help and cooperation the people in the area have given us.

COURIER: Is your installation ever open for tours?

RAJEWSKI: Yes, by advance appointment, for schools, Scouts, service clubs, and so on. We like the groups under 10 because we're so small.

1-800-292-2520 for gas info

Gov. William G. Milliken said travelers can now phone the Travel Bureau in the Michigan Department of Commerce to get information about Michigan's gasoline situation.

That information will be available, starting Thursday, on the Travel Bureau's regular toll-free information line: 1-800-292-2520. Out-of-state callers can phone: 1-800-248-5700.

Milliken said the new service was being added by the traveler's concerns about possible fuel shortages.

Milliken said the Travel Bureau established the gasoline reporting service to make sure motorists have the information they need to make travel plans.

The gasoline information will be supplied to the Travel Bureau by a number of sources, including the Automobile Club of Michigan, which conducts a weekly survey of 400 service stations across the state.

Sheriff George Lasater presents a Citizen Award to Jana Montaque. Betty Cooper watches.

Jana Montaque gets award

Jana Montaque, 21, of Charlevoix has been presented a Citizen Award by Charlevoix County Sheriff George Lasater.

Lasater said Ms. Montaque saved Betty Cooper "from serious injury" after a May 9 accident on M-66 near Ironton.

According to Lasater, Mrs. Cooper struck a horse that was on the raod. Her car flipped on its side and Mrs. Cooper "disoriented from the accident" was unable to get out of the car.

Ms. Montaque, who was a passenger in another car near the scene, "immediately jumped on the side of the car and opened the door so Mrs. Cooper could get out."

Seconds later, Lasater said, the Cooper vehicle was engulfed in flames.

Ms. Montaque resides at 316 Antrim Street. She works at the Emmet County Medical Care Facility and plans to attend North Central Michigan College in the registered nursing program.

Tisha: An adventurous tale

What do you do while waiting to get a hold of a copy of The World According to Garp?

Right. Back to the Christmas stocking rejects and another pleasant surprise. Tisha, the story of Anne Robbs as told to Robert Specht is a homespun and adventurous tale of a 19 year-old-girl from Oregon who chooses to brave the Alaskan wilderness as a school teacher.

The most significant adjustment Anne must face, is not the inconvenience of a more primitive existence, but the blatant bigotry of the citizens of Chicken, Alaska towards the Indians and half-breeds she hopes to educate along with the general populace.

An even greater crisis arises when the man she falls in live with is himself a half-breed. With all the quaintness of the one room school house and the ruggedness of the frontier, there is tenderness, excitement and much dedication of a young girl for her profession woven in every chapter. I'm glad I tried it.

Meanwhile this writing finds me half way through Garp. Why not read it with me and we'll talk about it next book review. The World According to Garp by John Irving was chosen as the No. 1 book of 1978 by Time Magazine.

Shope and Starr headline June 1 cancer benefit

Two popular figures on the country music scene — Kenny Starr and Gary Shope – will appear on the twin bill at the Charlevoix High School gymnasium Friday, June 1, at 8 p.m. under auspices of the Charlevoix County Chapter of the American Cancer Society.

Money raised by the country music program will help the county unit raise the $16,000 needed to meet its 1979 goal, according to Mrs. Patty Muma, campaign chairman. She points out that the money will be used both to assist cancer patients in the county and to finance research projects across the country into the cause and treatment of the disease.

Starr, 26, is a native of Topeka, Kan., who began his musical career at the age of five by singing for nickles and dimes at the VFW clubhouse near his home in Burlingame, Kan. Re organized his first group — "The Rocking Rebels" — when he was nine and later earned $10 to $15 a night with his second group, "Kenny and the Imperials."

At 16, he turned to country music and played local gigs with a band called "Kenny Starr and the Country Showmen." After winning an amateur talent contest, he was asked to appear on stage with Loretta Lynn and Conway Twitty in Wichita. Mrs. Lynn was impressed with his performance and asked him to join her road show.

Starr ended up with his first recording concert and his first hit: "The Blind Man in the Bleachers."

Starr has presented many country concerts in Michigan and was the featured performer at the Kalkaska Trout Festival in April.

Gary Shope is no stranger to Charlevoix County country music fans, having appeared in the city last May as part of the Cancer Society's fund raising drive.

Shope, 36, who has his own musical group called Interstate Country, is a native of Canton, Ohio, and started his musical career singing with his mother and aunts in their nightclub act. His mother also taught him how to play the accordion and showed him a few chords on the guitar.

"I just took it from there," he said in a recent interview.

Shope, whose career has been moving ahead rapidly in recent years, attributes the new converts to country music to the fact that country music itself has undergone a marked change, as country artists have moved into orchestrated background music. The old "twangy" sound from the early days of Nashville has all but disappeared.

Shope is a firm believer in audience participation.

"We talk to the people and joke with them and try to get them involved with what we're doing," he says. "We let them know we're there to work with them."

Tickets for the benefit performance may be purchased in Charlevoix at the First State Bank and the Charlevoix County State Bank; in Petoskey at ABC Music; in East Jordan at the Northwestern State Bank; in Boyne City at Bogema Pharmacy; and in Walloon Lake at the Junction Inn.

NOTICE-NOMINATING PETITIONS

Detroit Symphony Orchestra here May 30

The Detroit Symphony Orchestra will be making its "first ever" concert appearance in Charlevoix next week.

The orchestra is embarking on a series of out-state concerts at eight Michigan public schools. The orchestra will perform at Charlevoix High School Wednesday, May 30 at 11 p.m. in the gymnasium.

The Detroit Symphony Orchestra will be divided into two smaller orchestras for the tour. The orchestra performing in Charlevoix will be conducted by Teri Murai who will be making his conducting debut with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra on this tour. Murai is conductor of the concert orchestra at the University of Cincinnati's College Conservatory of Music.

The other half of the orchestra, conducted by Kenneth Jean, will be in East Jordan Thursday, May 31 at 11 a.m. in the high school gymnasium.

Both orchestras will perform at four high schools.

Content of the concerts will range from Mendelssohn to "Rocky" to Tchaikovsky to Rodgers and Hammerstein.

The out-state school concert tour is made possible in part with the assistance of a State of Michigan grant to the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, made through the state's funding agency, the Michigan Council for the Arts. Local sponsoring agencies and the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, Inc. provide the balance of the support for the tour.

The 1979-80 season marks the 66th in the orchestras history. During this time it has become firmly established among the foremost musical organizations of the world and has won the highest acclaim wherever it has appeared. Antal Dorati is the music director.

A special treat

First graders in Mrs. Becky Berg's class gave their mothers a special treat for Mother's Day. Each child had a part to play in one of five skits which showed off their blooming reading skills as well as giving them a chance to show off for Mom with puppets or hand made costumes and props. Later, they invited their moms for lunch in the cafeteria as did all the first graders. It was a thoughtful prelude to Mother's Day week end.

CMU counselors at NCMC

Academic counselors from Central Michigan University's Institute for Personal and Career Development will be on the North Central Michigan College campus Tuesday, May 29 to explain to potential students a bachelor's degree-completion program which will be available for persons in the Petoskey area.

Meetings will be held in the Administrative-Classroom Building, Room 122, at 4 and 7 p.m.

The degree-completion program, a cnuperative venture of CMU and North Central Michigan College, is an attempt to bring CMU's counseling, advisement and learning resources to the North Central area.

The degree completion program will be of special interest to registered and practical nurses, to other individuals working full time who need to complete a baccalaureate degree for career advancement and to homemakers who have interrupted their college education to raise a family.

Through the Institute, the external degree arm of CMU, students in the North Central Area may enroll in any of several areas of concentration in the Institute's management and supervision, community development or liberal studies bachelor's degree programs.

Gas plan ill conceived

Northern Michigan Congressman Bob Davis says President Carter's stand-by gas rationing plan was ill-conceived and left too many questions in the minds of Congress and the public.

"I can't believe such a haphazard plan took two years and $3 million to develop," Davis said. "There was nowhere near sufficient input from the people of this country with regard to the needs of individuals.

"The plan gave no consideration to the special requirements of rural drivers, farmers, traveling salesmen, taxi drivers, delivery service operators, people living in areas without mass transit . . the list is almost endless," he noted.

Despite his many reservations, Davis said he was astonished that the plan failed by such a substantial margin, 246-159.

"I think the members of Congress were especially hesitant to give the President such special powers never before granted during peacetime, and without specifying the details of the proposal, and what degree of shortage would trigger it," he explained. "Another major factor which concerned me and a number of members was the so-called 'White Market' threat. People who live in metropolitan areas where public transportation is available would certainly be selling their coupons - at a tremendous profit - to people in rural areas who need the gas so badly. And they would be doing so with the consent of the U.S. Government."

Davis also noted a portion of the original 1975 Act directing the President to develop an emergency plan, which mandated that no one group or sector would have to suffer more than another in the event of a crisis. He said it was clear that the entire tourist industry would have been practically wiped out under Carter's proposal. Tourism is the third largest industry in the country and the second largest in Michigan.

"The President will simply have to take more things into consideration when he writes his next plan. I think a better idea would be to allow each state to allocate its gas supply as it sees fit. States could do a better job of filling the needs of individual citizens. It's hard to believe that the Department of Energy could manage anything well, let alone 160 million registered vehicles a month. It would be a total bureaucratic jungle."

County Day camp scheduled June 11-15

Initial plans for the annual Charlevoix County Day Camp, sponsored by the Girl Scouts of the county, have been announced by Mrs. Bruce Edwards, camp director.

The camp, to be held at Whiting Park June 11-15, is open to all girls of Girl Scout age whether they are members of an organized troop or not, Mrs. Edwards said.

Deadline for registering for the camp is Tuesday, May 22.

Girls in the fourth grade and younger will participate in the Brownie program which will be held during the day. Those girls who are above fourth grade level will have a 'sleep over' Wednesday and Thursday nights.

On Thursday, camp will begin at 1 p.m. and continue until 7 p.m. This has been designated as Visitors Day when parents may visit the camp and see the accomplishments of the girls.

Outdoor living including cook-outs, Girl Scout skills and crafts will be features of the five-day camp Mrs. Edwards said.

Mrs. Jill Washburn of Charlevoix and Mrs. Lucinda Karlskin of Boyne City will be assistant directors of the camp. Mrs. Sue Miller will be in charge of crafts.

Approximately 80 percent of Scouts attending the camp have earned cookie credits of $5.00 which are applied toward their camping fee of $7.00.

Judge Fershee hears arguments in 'Big Rock 14' trial

By SARA GAY DAMMANN

Oral arguments to define the scope of the trial of the "Big Rock 14" were heard by District Court Judge David Fershee Tuesday.

If the defense is successful the trial will focus on the issues of nuclear safety and not be limited to the question of the defendants trespassing on Consumers Power Company property during a protest demonstration last Dec. 2.

The "Big Rock 14" is a group of young men and women, members of the anti-nuclear power organization known as NOMAD (Northern Michigan Alternative Development). They were arrested for trespassing on December 2, 1978.

The 14 arrested, said at the time, they were intentionally trespassing onto Consumers Power Company property in order to draw public attention to the danger of nuclear power and Big Rock, which they feel should be shut down.

Attorneys for the group, James Olson and William Rastetter have presented a defense based on issues of "Freedom of Speech" and "Competing Harms" or "Neeessity".

District Court Judge David Fershee is expected to decide in the next several weeks if he will hear the case on this defense or limit the scope of the trial to simple trespassing, as argued by Charlevoix County Prosecuting Attorney Scott Beatty.

The defense of "competing harms" argues that the action of trespassing at Big Rock was justified because the potential danger posed by nuclear power is greater than the harm of trespassing.

The defense of necessity argues further that based on Common Law, one has the right to trespass on a neighbors property to warn of imminent danger. In the agricultural era, for example, a person could cross into another person's property to prevent that person's cattle from straying over and eating his crops, Olson explained earlier.

In similar nuclear power plant trespass cases this defense has met with little success.

However, in a recent case concerning Commonwealth Edison Co. of Illinois' Zion nuclear station, 20 defendants argued for a jury trial on the same defense in the hopes of putting the nuclear power industry on trial. They succeeded in getting the trial during which each defendant testified as to his own views of the dangers of nuclear power. They were all acquitted.

Charlevoix Prosecutor Beatty argued Tuesday, before Judge Fershee that the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) has been given the sole power to make "deliberate choices regarding nuclear power" by the State of Michigan and the United States Congress.

Beatty also argued that the defendants had other means of pointing out the dangers of nuclear power, such as by petition, rather than taking the illegal action of trespassing.

Olson and Rastetter's argument for the "competing harms" defense would hold that the dangers presented by the plant are greater than the harm done by the peaceful protest and trespassing.

Beatty's brief, filed April 19, 1979, argues that this defense is not "available" when the action would not alleviate the harm – e.g. the dangers of nuclear power – and where the danger "is not readily perceivable."

Speaking in court Tuesday, Olson argued that the defense of "necessity" was not pre-empted by the laws which established the NRC.

Citing the recent Oklahoma decision in the successful suit of the family of Karen Silkwood against the Kerr McGee Corporation for Silkwood's radiological contamination, Olson contended the issue of radiological safety was not limited to NRC jurisdiction.

Beatty said during his oral presentation "As a citizen living in Charlevoix County with two children, I too am concerned and have given thought to the biological and social costs of nuclear power, but I cannot substitute my feelings for that of Congress."

He added "the debate is continuing and the laws may be changed.

"I share the defendants concerns and am concerned as a citizen about the argument raised by the defense, but this court is not the place to argue them."

Judge Fershee and Beatty buth have expressed concern about the heavy burden of time and costs this trial would place on the crowded district court if the issue were to be dehated as part of the defense.

Judge Fershee's deeision on the scope of the trial is expected shortly. In any event, Judge Fershee said, the case will not come to trial until early fall.

A weekend celebration

One hundred years ago Charlevoix became a chartered village. Area residents celebrated that centennial Saturday and Sunday.

Saturday's activities featured a parade (led by Chief of Police Jack Mol), a re-enactment of the "Battle of Pine River" (produced by Dave Phillips), and a vaudeville show in East Park (featuring a barbershop group). Several area organizations set up booths in the park and many were in 19th century dress. A beard judging contest also was held Saturday with Bill Clow having the longest beard, Joe McCann the best looking beard and Al Christensen the most original beard. More activities followed on Sunday. (More photos on page 6).

On Monday, area residents observed Memorial Day. A service was held at Brookside Cemetery where a special plaque was unveiled. See Page 5.

NRC: 'We cannot plan against human error'

By SARA GAY DAMMANN
Special to the Courier

"It's all a matter of education, a matter of risk-benefit analysis. It's always that way with toxicological and carcinogenic substances," A Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) official in Chicago shouted into the phone.

The official, who later begged not to be identified, was reacting to a series of questions on nuclear power plant safety, specifically at Big Rock Point.

He was irritated because the interviewer asked "If Big Rock's most 'credible predictable accident', as it is called, would not release radioactivity beyond the power plant's boundaries, why are emergency evacuation plans necessary for the Charlevoix area?"

Later NRC Radiologic Specialist William Axelson explained the contradiction as follows:

"The design methodology takes into consideration the worst possible credible accident, from a mechanical failure point of view, or from the view of some disaster as tornadoes and earthquakes.

"But we cannot plan against human error. So we say 'let's plan against something we can't forsee."

He referred to the Three Mile Island Reactor in Harrisburg, Pa., "Three Mile Island's accident involved human error. There is no way to design against that."

Axelson said the NRC is maintaining "an extremely low threshold on safety - a cautious position."

"But," he continued, "We cannot go on like this. It is getting so expensive," he said, operating nuclear plants with increasingly stricter safety standards, "We might as well throw the whole thing out the window."

His sense of frustration is shared at Big Rock. Safety standards for nuclear plants have been tightened since Big Rock was constructed in 1962, forcing such older plants to spend more time and money catching up.

SHOULD OLDER PLANTS BE CLOSED?

Dissident members of the community of nuclear scientists have called for the closure of such older plants as Big Rock.

In February 1977, ELEMENTS, the publication of the Institute of Policy Studies in Washington, D.C., named Big Rock one of the 10 most dangerous plants in the country.

ELEMENTS said that the 10 nuclear plants built before 1972 "do not meet minimal safety regulations set up after 1972."

Three former General Electric Engineers, one of whom worked on Big Rock, testified before the Congressional Joint Committee on Atomic Energy that "Big Rock and Dresden 1 (Illinois) are the farthest away from today's safety regulations and should be closed."

Robert Pollard, now a member of The Union of Concerned Scientists, formerly with the NRC, named Big Rock along with six other plants as "examples of operating reactors with serious known safety deficiencies and which have been given legal exemptions from regulations."

To clarify, these criticisms and others, n series of questions were asked of spokesmen for Big Rock and the NRC.

The odds of a melt-down at Big Rock, considered to be the ultimate nuclear accident, are not considered high by industry or NRC spokesmen.

The controversial Rasmussen Report, quoted by Don DeMoor, technical engineer at Big Rock, "gives the probability of a melt-down at any single plant) as one in 20,000 per reactor per year." DeMoor noted, in written answers to COURIER questions, that "portions of Wash 1400 (Rasmussen Report) are not considered valid for all purposes but the probabilities provides a good perspective."

NRC Environmental Monitoring and Emergency Planner A. Janusea said that the worst possible credible accident at Big Rock would be a 15 percent melt-down with no off-site radioactivity."

Trying to square that statement with emergency evacuation plans led his colleague to the statement that these predictions are based on engineering studies not considereration of human error.

Charles Axtell, health physicist at Big Rock, said Big Rock has back up safety features.

Several local critics, as well as nationally known critics, and the "Big Rock 14" assert that Big Rock has exemptions from the NRC on certain back-up safety features, including the emergency cooling systems.

The cooling systems are essential to controlling the speed of fission and keeping temperatures within the reactor from rising too high.

Axtel and DeMoor said they did not understand the basis of this question. "Big Rock has two emergency core spray systems. Each one by itself is adequate for cure cooling requirements. Both core spray systems must be operable at all times during reactor power operation. The back-up core spray system was installed at the plant in 1971," DeMoor wrote.

Asked if the question referred to pumps, which some critics charge do not meet NRC standards, DeMoore responded, "Big Rock has two pumps (one electric and one diesel driven) to supply the core spray systems. We have no exemptions from the regulations related to any pumps at the plant."

Later DeMuore referred to "exemptions on a temporary basis" which Big Rock had until 1976.

Then he added that "the plant now has only one minor life-time exemption" ... which was "granted following thorough analysis and approval by the NRC" and is "tested on a monthly basis." DeMoore did not further explain the nature of this life-time exemption.

CONTROL ROD SPEED

Critics of Big Rock have questioned the working of the "control rods" which act as barriers between the fuel bundles to slow the rate of fission. These rods, made of zirconium, are critieal controls.

One source of Big Rock, who asked for anonymity, confirmed "we are always having trouble with control rods. If they are sluw too much steam can be created. There is a potential hazard which could point to a mechanical problem within the system."

DeMoor responded saying "we have experienced rod withdrawal problems (about 5 times in the last 10 years) which have not caused loss of scram ("emergency)" or insert capability." DeMoor stated that even if a single rod failed a time test, the plant could still shut down in less than 2 seconds.

Teresa Hubbard, spokesperson for the "Big Rock 14" said in an interview, that Big Rock had been cited by the NRC for setting alarms on radiation monitors on the stack too high, allowing radioactivity to escape into the atmosphere.

Charles Axtell said the charge was "completely false."

NRC scientist William Fisher, however, said that there have been some problems about the monitoring of effluence from Big Rock's stack, but he did not think radioactivity had ever exceeded NRC limits.

Martin Schumacher an NRC scientist who regularly inspects Big Rock said he was not aware of problems with the stack monitors, but had cited Consumers for water discharge monitors improperly set. But he maintained that radioactive discharge into Lake Michigan had not exceeded NRC standards.

LEAK AND RATTLE

Several sources at Big Rock were questioned about the significance of the leak of 2 quarts of radioactive water last month and the subsequent

Timber to be sold

A variety of timber standing in Whiting Pork is being offered for sale to the highest bidder.

Professional Forester Lee Ekstrom, on behalf of the Charlevoix County Parks Commission, has sent out notices asking for bids on 1,136 trees totalling approximately 139,060 board feet.

A variety of species is represented in the sale proposal, including maple, basswood, beach, elm, ash, yellow birch, black cherry, and aspen. All of the trees to be cut have been marked with yellow paint, according to Eckstrom, with those considered marketable differentiated from those considered nonmarketable.

Special provisions of the sale contract will include the payment of one-half of the contract price at contract signing and the remaining half before logging begins. Also, no logging will be permitted between June 1 and September 15, when the park experiences its busiest time.

Bids should be returned to Eckstrom at Box 2211, Boyne City, by June 4.

Cystic Fibrosis Bike-a-thon scheduled for Saturday morning

Charlevoix will be a biking community this coming Saturday.

That's the date of the Bike-a-thon co-sponsored by the Charlevoix Jaycees and the Cycstic Fibrosis Foundation.

Chairman Dan Miller reports that the Bike-a-thon will start at the Charlevoix Elementary School at 9:30 in the morning and proceed along a three-mile loop course on Division Street, Mercer Boulevard, Mt. McSauba Road, and back to Division Street.

Every bike rider aged 10 and up is welcome to participate in the event, according to Miller. The only requirement is that they secure sponsors pledging at least 10 cents a mile, although that may be broken down to as many as 10 sponsors at one cent a mile.

All riders securing $35 in pledges, and collecting the cash for them, will receive a T shirt with the inscription "I Did It for CF".

Last week 550 pledge sheets had already been passed out, but there are still some available at the Chamber of Commerce building.

Miller points out that it is especially important for the Cystic Fibrosis fund drive to be successful this year because researchers are nearing the discovery of a cure for the disease but have run out of money to continue their work. They have recently received a $500,000 emergency government grant but much more money is needed.

Research is centered on detecting the gene that causes Cystic Fibrosis and developing a drug to help those afflicted with the disease.

"They could have the answer in two years if they can continue the research," Miller told the Courier.

The Cystic Fibrosis Foundation has been in existence for 17 years, fighting the disease that is the number one killing childhood disease.

In case of rain Saturday, the Bike-a-thon will be postponed one week to June 9, same time, same place.

Charlevoix grad named commencement speaker

Charles Thomas Bleha will be the speaker at the Charlevoix High School commencement exercise Sunday, June 10.

Bleha is a graduate of Charlevoix High School (Class of '52) and the University of Michigan (Class of '56).

Bleha has worked for the U.S. State Department's Foreign Service since 1961, holding a variety of positions in Washington and overseas (Japan and West Germany). He has been deputy director for Republic of China (Taiwan) affairs at the State Department in Washington; first secretary for political affairs at the U.S. Embassy in Tokyo; and State Department Fellow at Harvard University's Center for International Affairs in Cambridge, Mass., where he is presently.

Married to the former Irene Pearson, Bleha and his wife have three children: Sarah, 5; Rachel, 3; and Daniel 1.

His parents, Mr and Mrs. Charles J. Bleha, are lifelong residents of Charlevoix. His brother, John, is living in Camarillo, Cal., where he works for Proctor and Gamble.

Commencement exercises begin at 3 p.m. in the high school gymnasium.

Charlevoix Hospital celebrates its 60th anniversary this summer

This will be a summer of celebration for Charlevoix Area Hospital.

Simultaneously, the hospital is Celebrating its 60th Anniversary, its 25th Anniversary in its present building, and the breaking of ground for the new wing and renovation program to meet the needs of the community today.

In February 1919, Charlevoix Hospital Trustees, Harry Nicholls, Jacob Crane, Lisle Shanahan, Ira Admans, W.H. Miller, Alvah Crimmins, Albert Bridge and William Finucan signed the Articles of Association stating the intent to build Charlevoix Hospital.

The purpose then of the Charlevoix Hospital Association was "to be operated primarily for the welfare of the permanent or transient residents of the City of Charlevoix, Michigan, and such other persons as may apply." And the Articles stated: "said hospital shall not be operated for the purpose of making a profit."

Today, 60 years later, Charlevoix Area Hospital serves not just the City of Charlevoix, but provides service to residents of Charlevoix, northern Antrim and parts of Emmet counties. It remains a "not-for-profit institution, which means that funds received for services are used to maintain the facility, purchase new equipment and keep pace with the constant advances in the field of medicine.

The original hospital, a remodeled large residence, was purchased for $2,000 in 1917, from Robert and Florence Chamberlain of Detroit and Fred and Mary Thomas of Charlevoix. The two story frame structure was located at 303 West Hurlbut Street.

The 23-bed hospital was managed and operated by Dr. Robert B. Armstrong.

Minimum charges for hospitalization in 1920 were $20 a week for a ward, $35 a week for a private room or $4 and $6 a day for ward or private room respectively.

By 1924 the demands on the new hospital had become so great an additional wing was added, bringing the total number of beds to 27.

Every inch of space in the converted home was efficiently used. New equipment was added annually as the hospital grew.

By 1944 it was apparent that demands on the hospital were outstripping the potential of the aging structure and the ground work was laid for the present hospital.

W.H. Wallace, E.J. Edwards and Earl Young formed a committee to study the problems and began raising funds for a new hospital.

Another ten years passed before the dream of a new facility was realized, but during those years many Charlevoixans worked diligently, raising funds, working with the government to obtain assistance and consulting architects.

The present site, adjacent to Lake Michigan, with its semi-wooded lake-side atmosphere had been a city trailer park. The hospital trustees had explored the possibilities of acquiring the site but the costs of the project had seemed too high.

In 1951 the City of Charlevoix deeded the property to the hospital for a token of $1.00, the funds to build the new facility had reached $29,000. Another $294,000 was raised the summer of 1951. Matched by a federal grant of $306,075, the project became a reality.

The present 44-bed Charlevoix Area Hospital was dedicated August 22, 1954.

A tribute to the original trustees and the people who helped Charlevoix Area Hospital grow over these past 60 years is that each facility served so long and so well.

The present 44-bed hospital remains a well planned hospital, that combines excellent facilities with an aesthetically pleasing atmosphere.

The renovations and new wing which will take off this summer, thanks to the generosity of people in the area and community who have donated more than $800,000 to the project, will not substantially alter the hospital built in 1954.

The planners in the 1950's had forseen, almost perfectly, the bed need for the hospital. Thus the new wing does not involve additional beds.

This year's building projects involve a bringing up to date of out-patient facilities – Xray, lab, emergency room and so on – rearrangment of space within the hospital and the addition of a wing to house beds and administrative and nursing office moved from their present locations to provide the space for internal renvations.

The steady growth of Charlevoix Area Hospital, from its first home on Hurlbut Street to the present, has been well planned and guided by citizens of the area which the hospital serves.

The ground breaking for the new wing is slated for early August.

The original purposes of the hospital, stated in 1919, remain, "to provide a suitable hospital for the eare and relief of all persons who may be sick or infirm."

No energy source is completely safe

The public should be thankful that the unforseen combination of mechanical and human errors happened in the nuclear utility industry at Three Mile Island where the effects were minor, instead of some nuclear defense system in the world where the results could have been disasterous. It is absurd for national governments to negotiate on whether they should have an over-kill of three or four times. The public must assume that any national government that demands to have nuclear weapons is willing to use them. Irresponsible national military establishments equipped with nuclear weapons are the most dangerous public enemies loose today.

In a world of diminishing energy resources it is foolish to place nuclear resources exclusively into weapons systems. It makes far more sense to ban the weapons and use nuclear resources for peaceful purposes. Uranium byproducts now considered as dangerous waste should be considered as potential sources of energy. Plutonium can power fission reactors, and tritium is a potential fusion resource. Nuclear reactors need not be limited to providing electricity for utilities. It is possible that they could synthesize fuels for the new generation of reinvented automobiles, perhaps fuels for fuel cells that could power electric cars with far greater efficiency than internal combustion engines now provide.

Nuclear safeguards should be made as effective as possible and rethinking of nuclear systems may be justified, but no energy source is completely safe. The current popular energy choice is solar energy, but solar radiation is known to cause skin cancer. Now everybody chant. No more sun! No more sun! No more sun! Hold it, that solution is worse than the problem. Solar radiation produces far more cancer in whites than blacks and therefore it produces racist radiation. Should the sun be taken to court and be required to produce radiation that is equally harmful to blacks and whites?

If the sun fails to comply a court order to do so, should it be fined $10 billion a day until it conforms, or until the United States national debt is eliminated and inflation is controlled?

It is easy to be unreasonably logical.

Every potential source of energy should be researched.

Time for a teacher and student survey

Editor:

The Charlevoix Public School System has undertaken a telephone survey to find flaws in our school system. Parents were called at random and asked their opinions about the school system.

I believe two other groups should have been contacted first. Parents are not at the school nine months of the year. The main contact a parent has with school is teachers conferences and school activities. Most parents derive their opinions of the school system from their school days, and what their child tells them.

A teacher survey and a student survey should be undertaken next. A suggestion box for teachers should be placed in the teachers lounge, and I am sure there are some teachers that could come up with much better suggestions than I could as a parent. Students fourth thru twelfth could do their survey during class-time. I am sure there are many students who have at least one thing that bugs them at school.

I also believe each student should fill out a teacher rating slip at the end of the year. This way the school system can correct or change an inferior teacher.

Cooperative Nursery says thanks

Editor:

The Charlevoix Cooperative Nursery School would like to thank the following individuals and businesses for their contributions of time and materials for our nursery:

Parson's Farm, Elzinga's Orchard, Matchett Farm, Leroy Buchannan (Oleson's), Site Planning Development, Glen's Market, Erber Auto Company, Wojan Aluminum, Grey Gables Inn (Dave Phillips), Charlevoix Courier, Boggs Pastry Shop, George Lasater (Sheriff's Dept.), Charlevoix Post Office, Coca-Cola Bottling Co., Charlevoix Fire Department, Charlevoix Area Hospital, Terri Hodge, Terry Solmanson (Aartvark).

These individuals and businesses are called upon year after year to contribute to our program and we would like them to know that we greatly appreciate their help. We could not continue to operate without them.

We would also like to express our appreciation to the people of Charlevoix who donated to our bottle cap drive; save Glen's slips for us; bought tickets for our grocery raffle and show so many kindnesses. Charlevoix can be proud of the fact that we have so many in our community who are willing to help our children.

We would like to offer a super special thank you to all the parents who gave so much of themselves to make this a successful year.

Carter on the skids

It is hard to remember another president who has moved into his final eclipse faster than Jimmy Carter.

Late last fall, when it appeared that Egypt and Israel might sign their peace treaty before Christmas, Carter was riding fairly high. Today, six months later, his chances of winning the Democratic nomination appear mighty slim.

Not even Richard Nixon fell from grace that fast.

Jimmy Carter's downfall, of course, can be laid directly tu the fact that the Carter administration was unwilling or unable to keep the Shah in power in oil-rich Iran. If somehow - either by guise or guns – the Carter administration had been able tc maintain the status quo in Iran, none of the resulting calamities would have occured on this side of the Atlantic, including $1-a-gallon gasoline, galloping interest rates and double-digit inflation.

Part of Jimmy Carter's problem is a foolish consistency, which Ralph Waldo Emerson called "the hobgoblin of little minds." Before his election and immediately after his election, Carter assured the American people that he would never impose wage and price controls. He also adopted a policy of non-interference in labor-management negotiations.

This probably was well and good during a period of relative economic stability. However, since Iran went down the tube, the situation has changed rapidly. A genuine energy crisis is upon us and the resulting scramble for petroleum has driven up the price of everything from candy bars to Cadillacs.

Skyrocketing inflation not only has eroded the value of the dollar but has put the safety of our homes, our jobs and our businesses on the line. The margin between economic success and failure grows narrower with every passing day.

Oddly enough it doesn't seem to bother Carter one bit that he has been unable to make good on a campaign promise to pare down the size of government. Yet he clings steadfastly to an economic policy that is proving disasterous to the country as a whole.

Although Carter still has more than a year and a half remaining in his term, I already have the feeling that he has abdicated his responsibilities. The nation is continuing to function, but there is a disturbing feeling among individual Americans that there is a terrible leadership void in Washington. You know what the President should be doing in times like these, and it is maddening whenhe doesn't do them.

Instead we find such a respected columnist as Jack Anderson going on television to apologize to Gerald Ford for voting for Jimmy Carter.

Instead we find five Democratic congressmen calling a press conference asking Sen. Edward Kennedy to seek the Democratic nomination next summer, despite Kennedy's insistence that he is not a candidate and doesn't intend to become one.

Ironically, the five dissidents were charged by Democratic National Chairman John White with trying to hand the election over to the Republicans. White apparently doesn't understand that the GOP is a shoo-in in1980 unless there is a major shake-up in the Democratic party.

The tragedy of all this is that Jimmy Carter is a good man, a kind man, a thoughtful man, a peaceful man and in many ways a brilliant man. He has championed human rights throughout the world in a manner that makes me proud to be an American.

That is why his failure to come to grips with the realities of the energy crisis is so puzzling. Can he really have such a cavalier attitude toward the continued solvency of his fellow citizens? Or does he have an ace up his sleeve that he isn't ready to play?

I really don't know.

But I do know that it is harder for me to meet my financial obligations and still put bread on the table with every passing day. And I am terribly concerned not only for myself and my family but for my country.

When you can't beat the system

I love the story about the Burbank appliance dealer who was having a tough time getting rid of discarded appliances. He kept putting them in the alley but there wasn't a service organization or a city truck in the world that would pick them up.

Finally, he got a brainstorm. He marked a price on them and by the end of the day they were all stolen.

Sometimes, when you can't beat the system, you just have to work within its confines. I found out long ago with children. The only way we could get one of the kids to wash and wax the car was to let him have it for a date.

To get the lawn mowed, we invested in a riding mower. They killed one another for the chance to cut the grass. When my daughter's bedroom became a fire hazard, all I had to do was say, "Why don't you have a slumber party?" Within hours, she had brought it up to health standards.

It was sneaky, but I used to move leftovers by putting a note on them saying, "DO NOT TOUCH. THIS IS FOR THE PARTY."

The other day when I noted a message scribbled in my husband's handwriting: "Carpers 6 p.m. dinner, Wednesday."

I remembered the Carpers. Her first name was either Bambi, Popah, Cupeake, Sleepy, Happy, Sneezy – or one of the dwarfs, I couldn't remember which. I was at her house once and felt like a fool when I ate a strawberry in a small dish in her bathroom and it was soap.

Well, I wasn't going to be caught with my decor down when they came to dinner. I set about replacing light bulbs in every room in the house, bought live plants where before there had been death and brownness. Cleared off the countertop. Took the ironing board down, bought a set of matching glasses and took all the empty shampoo bottles out of the shower.

I brought in the sled from the porch, scratched a "THIS HOUSE IS BEING PATROLLED BY A TWO-YEAR-OLD." decal off my kitchen window and took a manger scene out of the bookease.

My husband looked around and said, "I forgot to tell you. We're invited to the Carpers' for dinner Wednesday."

The great gasoline gluttony

WASHINGTON – Communist and Socialist societies usually dismay me because they stifle creativity and make society drab. I vastly prefer life in the U.S.A., but I am still dismayed when I see how our free economy encourages the old cardinal sin of gluttony. We're sure having a rash of it on gasoline.

Sure, California has an authentic problem with short supplies of gasoline, but Californians have also demonstrated that they are captives of the automobile, the greatest ego extender in the history of mankind. California is void of pioneer spirit. Its adventures and forays can only be launched on gasoline-drenched roads.

The media today is mercury, and the panic in California was fired by the same media which now spreads it across the Republic. Souls who live in metropolitan areas are quick to excite. Their heads spinning with tales of California gasoline grimness, they hurry to burn one gallon so they can buy five. We had that plenty in excitable Washington, D.C. last weekend.

–lly every measure, gasoline supplies in this nation are tight, but not critically short. The U.S. shortfall in crude oil imports runs about 600,000 barrels a day, due to the cutback in Iran and Saudia Arabia dropping its production to normal.

Altogether, however, there is enough gasoline for the approximately 130 million vehicles in the U.S. to get along reasonably well. But there isn't enough gasoline when people let their colons twitch at the sight of a gauge not quite up to full, thus compelling them to drive to the nearest gas station for a look-see which can reveal a "closed" sign or a long line of cars.

Never in the history of this Republic has so much gasoline sloshed around so many cars so full of gas. And all this cnme to pass without the incentive of trading stamps.

Last weekend I was visiting my son at Fort Union, Va., and noticed that the citizenry in those parts – in places like Zion's Crossroads, Palmyra and Orange – were not crowding gas stations or letting their eyeballs pop at gas gauges. Indeed, motorists in those villages were tranquil and decent, and probably refrained from panic buying because they didn't identify their area with such sin centers as Los Angeles and New York.

The American Automobile Assn. surveyed 3,218 gas stations across the country last weekend, and learned that 46 percent of them were open on Sunday (normally it's 80 percent), that 61 percent were open Saturday night, and that half of them were open after eight o'clock during the week. The AAA also reported that gasoline has gone up 12 cents a gallon since Christmas, and that full-service unleaded now averages 84 cents a gallon.

But Europeans and Asians pay two and three times this much for gasoline which is less available than ours. We Americans are the gasoline pigs of the universe. I had no opinion on gas rationing before, really, but now I favor it only because it will bring order to our gluttony.

Should we blame all this on the Arabs? No. Saudi Arabia's oil minister, Sheik Yamani, has warned us for years that we Americans burn entirely too much gas. The Saudis would rather conserve their oil wealth for the bigger bucks it will one day bring in petrochemicals and pharmaceuticals.

Should we blame our gluttony on the oil companies? Well, partly. For years, television advertising sang the song of the open road, and flashed all those smiling gas station attendants at us (what phony advertising that is – for every smiler, there are 10 of the surely breed). Burn it, baby, burn it, that's what the oil companies shouted. Of late, they haven't pushed this, relying more on institutional ads which earnestly plead the case for more exploration.

But now we're getting a new form of gluttony from the oil companies, namely, advertising for all manner of merchandise, from wall-to-wall carpeting, to trips to Bermuda, to every gimcrack that Yankee ingenuity can fashion.

Recently, I got a toney booklet in the mail from one oil company urging me to buy every sort of beauty product imaginable – perfumes, face tints, lipsticks, eye shadows, nail polish, even jewelry – and charge it to my gas credit cnrd. Where's the plowback of windfall profits here? In new oil sourcing, or in Moon Drops perfume spray?

Do we need some llilly Graham-type revivalist to clean up this perdition? No, we have President Carter's moral equivalent of war (energy program), and Energy Secretary James Schlesinger, a devout, preaching sort, too, and what effect have they had?

Preachments cannot restrain the American motorist's desperate go-go spirit. Maybe gas rationing can.

discovery of a rattle in the reactor cure.

Few gave the leak any significance, observing it was a problem they discovered early and would be repaired before the plant returned tnperation.

The rattle, presumed to be a loose defuser plate, which is important in the circulation of water in the reactor core, is still being investigated, according to DeMoor. "The primary conc rn is to correct any situation that has a potential for affecting core wa r flow. Such . . . could cause -unevu heat transfer from the fuel and p.rhaps premature fuel cladding failure and undesireable fission gas release to the environs."

Trying to solve the leak and rattle questions led to two "minor" accidents at Big Rock in the past two weeks. Four different maintenance men, on two different occasions, working under the reactor vessel were drenched with water from inside the reactor core.

This water was r adioactive, but not as radioactive as it would be if the fuel rods were in place (all fuel was removed last month). That the men were thoroughly wetted was confirmed by one of the workers, Ron Siwarga of Charlevoix.

All four took showers, to wash contamination off their skin, and were given what is called a "whole body count", in which the amount of radioactivity within their bodies is measured. One individual was found to have some internal radiation, but very low, according to both Consumers and NRC spokesmen who investigated the incident after being told of it by the COURIER.

Siwarga told the COURIER he was confident that he suffered no ill effects.

NRC scientists and Axtell also said it was not a serious incident, nor required by law to be reported to the NRC. While Axtell said it was "not unusual," NRC spokesman described it as "unusual."

Petoskey physician Gerald Drake, who has studied data on radiation and health effects for more than 10 years, however, questioned the assurances that the incident was of no consequence. "The answers on radiation induced cancer are not in yet. We may find that low level sourrces of raidation cause cancer more frequently than high levels."

"The 200 people of Nichiama received no direct radiation, from the bombs, yet these people have four to eight times the expected rate of leukemia."

Drake questioned if low levels of radiation, inhaled or swallowed could be monitored by the "whole body count."

Drake referred to four cases of cancer he knows of in Big Rock workers, all of which, he says, are types of cancer that could have been caused by low level radiation. He avoided saying these cancers were definetly radiation induced, but he cited a dozen studies on nuclear worker safety which do show a correlation between low level radiation and cancer in workers.

NRC spokesmen say that Big Rock workers must be limited to an exposure of 3,000 millirads every three months.

Several sources questioned if workers were permitted "to burn themselves up" (receive their limit) at the end of a quarter and be re-exposed withsdays.

Axtell said such practice was against Consumer's policy. NRC spokesmen said that while not illegal, they do not believe such occurances take place at Big Rock.

Al Sevener, operations supervisor at Big Rock, under whose Senior Operators License Big Rock operates, echoed the frustrated NRC spokesman's statement when he said, redundant safety requirements are making nuclear power too expensive.

"I am not upset by all the publicity. Having the spotlight on us will make us improve. Ilut, Sevener said, "I wish people would accept the answers we give."

Edward Edwards, Hubert Paddock and Sam King are shown with markers.

Ralph Hamilton, Bob Miles, Bill Price, Ed Beutner and Dale Boss pose next to headstone for the 15 unidentified people who died on the Champlain.

Grave markers unveiled

Solid bronze grave markers that identify the graves of the veterans of this country's war to the Vietnam War have been encased in a redwood case and will be displayed at the post home of Charlevoix Post No. 1153, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The markers and their case, designed and made by Post Commander Clarence Goldstick, was unveiled at the Memorial Day program at Brookside Cemetery Monday.

The markers were a gift from a former resident, Harry Oldham of Perry, Ohio, Past Commander of his own post, Post Nu. 8548, Madison Ohio, and Past State Commander for Ohio. The markers were given to Walter Russell who presented them to the local post. Post Commander Goldstick then designed the 36" x 40" display case of polished redwood. The markers are mounted on a white cross with a background of artificial turf.

The markers are from the American Revolution, 1776; the War of 1812; G.A.R. 1865 (Civil War); U.S.A.-Cuba (Spanish American War 1898-1902; Indian War*; Mexican War*; World War I 1917-1918; World War II 1941-1945; Korean War*; Vietnam War*.

What happened at the 'Battle of Pine River'?

Back in 1976, the local history class of the Charlevoix High School prepared a history of the City of Charlevoix which was subsequently run in the Charlevoix Courier. A portion of the history, dealing with the battle of Pine River, is reprinted herewith as a prelude to the upcoming re-enactment of the battle:

At Pine River, or often called "Green River" because of the green appearance of the water at times, the only inhabitants of fishermen and Mormons met with serious repulses. Pine River seemed to be a serious, but favorite resort for the fishermen and a community of such were collected there.

Capt. T.D. Smith had early established a small settlement in the bay, southwest of the mouth of the river, between it and Pine River Point. Four more families were also established here, west of Smith between him and the point, three families at the mouth of the river and one, half a mile further north. Besides these Gentile families, there were two other families who had renounced Mormonism and eseaped from the settlement of his hostile trible of so-called Mormons. These peoples, whose names were Hull and Savage had on the pretense of embarking with Strang's approval, for Drummond Island, where he proposed to plant a colony. Once on the lake, these people laid their course for Pine River and here begged the protection of the fishermen. This protection was promised them providing the fugitives would help protect themselves.

The Mormons desired to get a fisherman by the name of Moon; also Hull and Savage, into their power, so under the color of law (the Circuit Court being at that time at St. James), proceeded with an armed party to Pine River. This day there was a quilting bee at the home of fisherman Morrison, at the mouth of the river, to which all the women were assembled. Some of the men had gone up Pine River, while the others were at the "other end of town," such as the westernmost houses in the settlement were called.

Two boats were seen approaching, heading for the mouth of the river. One of the fishermen, with the aid of a spy glass, saw there were nine men in each of the boats. As the circumstances looked suspicious, they determined to ascertain the object of the visit at once. Between them and the river was a stretch of beach where it was difficult to pass between the river and the bank. Launching a boat, ten or twleve men sprang into it, and rowed past the difficult passage. There they landed and proceeded on foot, following the beach until they reached the sand hillocks, where they turned into the wood, struck down a path that led over the bluff, and down to Morrison's shortly. The Mormon's were frightening the women with villainous threats, but upon the arrival of the fishermen, the invaders ceased their threats and insisted upon having Moon, Hull and Savage. In this request of course, they were rebuked and ordered off the land claimed by the fishermen.

Among the fishermen was a young man, Louis Geboo, who recognized among the party of Mormons, some of his former acquaintances. Thinking the danger of collision over, he proceeded to the boats of the Mormons, on the mere purpose of speaking to his friends. As a matter of simple precaution, he thought it best to see if his gun was ready for effective use. Stopping a moment to examine his weapon, he felt a bullet from a Mormon's gun pierce his leg. As Geboo started to limp back to his own party, they opened fire on the invaders, who got away with the utmost haste and were soon beyond gunshot.

A few days after this invasion, a rumor reached the fishermen that an expedition of one hundred was fitting itself out on the Mormon Island to come over and punish the settlers at Pine River. As there could be no possible hope of resisting such a force, the fishermen put on board the steamer "Columbia", their families and effects and left, all except Aloah Cable who remained but a short time later. When he went away the Pine River region was left without a white inhabitant.

Pine River appears to have remained an abandoned settlement after the hasty departure of the fishermen (Battle of Pine River) until the spring of 1854, when George Preston and family from Beaver Island arrived and took possession of one of the houses on the north side of the river and at once set about clearing land and making arrangements for a permanent home. Soon after, Caleb Cole and family arrived from the South Fox Islands and naturally took possession of another of the vacant houses. This was the commencement of the Mormon settlement at this point. In the fall, Medad Thompson arrived, and in the spring of 1855 were joined by See Alward, who also added to the Mormon population.

In 1855, John Dixon and family, accompanied by Wolcott and May, arrived here from Old Mission in the schooner "Emeline". Mr. Dixon had brought with him a considerable amount of supplies, and he erected a temporary residence on the beach. A path was cleared along the southern margin of the stream and later the family and goods were transported up the river, to land at the north shore where the stream leaves Round Lake. Although it was made plain to Mr. Dixon that he was not welcome, he nevertheless built his home here.

The eighth of July was observed by the Mormons as their principal holiday, being the anniversary of Strang's coronation. The present summer, a large part of Mormons came over to Pine River, seemingly on a pienic excursion. The party passed with their boats up Pine River, entered the south arm and spent the night on a small island, two miles beyond the entrance, to which they gave the name which it has since borne, "Holy Island".

The following day, Mrs. Dixon noticed that boats of the hostile enemies were towing timber. Suspecting mischief, and somewhat alarmed, Mrs. Dixon resolved to ascertain what was going forward. A Mormon neighbor, to whom she applied for information, refused to give her any. Proceeding down to the mouth of the river, she observed some of the men drawing timber from the river, and others working with spades. Upon inquiry she was told they were about to erect a gallows on which should be hanged all who violated their laws. After the Mormons left, the gallows was found standing with four roughly carved wooden images of men hanging by the necks and another standing erect on top of the frame. On one of them was the figure of a coffin drawn in red chalk, and three men walking away from it, with this inscription, "Dixon, successor to the Pine River, murdered, in his dying hours abandoned by his friends."

Land, at this early period, not being marked, could not be bought, but only secured by what was known as the "squatter's claim", by living on the land and making improvements until such a time came that they could buy it from the government. As fishermen came in and settled on claims, they made a compact that they would not undermine each other, which compact was strictly carried out. The life of a pioneer is a hard one from all points of view. Their houses were of only one story and usually one room which served as kitchen, living room, and bedroom. For lights, these settlers burned fish oil in small lamps holding about a tea cup of oil. For wicks they often used a strip of cotton and sometimes fat was in a saucer with a rag for a wick. Fish was plenty in these days, but fresh meat was very scarce, salt pork being the principal meat. The pioneers were compelled to do without many articles which we now consider absolutely essential. But still the pioneers fought bravely on.

The Charlevoix High School girls track team finished in seventh place in the Michigan-Huron Shores Conference track and field meet held Thursday at Petoskey.

Others who placed in the meet were Tanya Ford who came in fifth in the 100 yard dash; the 440 relay team (Ford, Marie Buday, Jones, Cris Culbertson) who placed second with a time of 54.1 (the winning time was :54); the mile relay team (Ford, Culbertson, Buday, Mary Beth Eldredge) who finished, fourth and the 880 relay team (Ford, Buday, Eldredge, Culbertson) fifth.

'Annie' good for the spring blahs

"Tomorrow"
as sung by Andrea McCardle
Strouse and Charnin
c. 1977, CBS, Inc.

Tomorrow
The sun'll come out TOMORROW
Bet your bottom dollar that TOMORROW they'll be sun

Just thinkin' about TOMORROW clears away the cobwebs and the sorrow
'til there's none

When I'm stuck with a day that's grey and lonely
I just stick out my chin and grin and say oh

The sun'll come out TOMORROW
So I gotta hang on 'til TOMORROW come what may

TOMORROW
TOMORROW
I love ya TOMORROW
You're only a day away.

Writing about "Annie" is like writing about Chicago. Every other person you talk to has already seen it and been there. Being a neophyte at experieneing either, there is a definite fear that I will, in my enthusiasm, come across like a promotional clip in the AAA magazine:

"You come for the show. You come back for the food – Benihana of Tokyo."

"The Bakery is my choice the third night. (What could have been better the first two?) It probably has the most appeal to the true gourmet...I chose an individual serving of Beef Wellington encased in a rich pastry with a tasty sauce which I'm sure was laced with wine..."

"On stage events this week in Chicago are many, and one is better than the next. At the Arie Crown Theater, McCormick Place, 23rd, and Lake Shore Drive, "Annie" is currently featured...(there isn't adry eye in the house when the curtain closes on the entire cast joining Little Orphan Annie singing that theme song of undying optimism "Tomorrow."

Many times we fall victim to false advertising and unscrupulous promotional techniques. This time our week end fling in Chicago as advertised ran true to description. It was even windy, just like it's supposed to be. "Annie" was certainly all we expected, full of warmth and humor and good music. I was particularly impressed by the sets. Designed by David Mitchell, for which he won both the Tony and Outer Critics' Circle Awards, the orphanage, the "Hooverville under the 59th St. Bridge", and New York City fur the "N.Y.C." number were unbelievably well executed.

For that every other one who has not yet had the pleasure of experiencing "Annie" and at the expense of over-promotion: "Annie" based on Harold Gray's "Little Orphan Annie" cartoon character, is the story of a little girl who optimistically faces "The Hard-Knock Life". Left eleven years ago in the N.Y.C. Municipal Orphanage (Girl's Annex), Annie never stops harboring the hope that "Maybe"her parents will come back for her one day. There is Miss Hannigan the bitter old orphanage director who despises "Little Girls" and her shiftless brother, Rooster, who along wth his sleazy girl friend, Lily, plot to impersonate Annie's parents in hopes of earning a sizeable reward. This is their devious means of reaching "Easy Street" In the midst of the Depression. Hurry for Daddy Warbucks, of course, who loves "N.Y.C." and money, and most recently Annie whom he has met through a charitable gesture of "entertaining an orphan" over the Christmas holidays. His dream is that if Annie's real parents can't be found, that she "Won't Be An Orphan For Long," that in fact, he can adopt her. Despite all his money, "Something Was Missing" in his life. He found that something to be Someone named Annie, with all her candor and charm

There are other songs and other characters, but non so heart-rendering as the forever optimistic Annie belting out "Tomorrow" for all she's worth. "Annie" was good for the Depression and she was good for the late Spring blahs. You can't help but feel better after this one. "Annie" and Chicago – I'd love to be going again "Tomorrow."

Andrews hopes appeals court protects embattled fishery

State Rep. Steve Andrews Mouday said he is concerned about the future of the Great Lakes fishery in lieu of Federal District Court Judge Noel Fox's decision allowing Indian tribes to fish without regulation from the state in parts of the Great Lakes.

Andrews told the Presque Isle County Sportsmen's Club in a letter:

"While the debate over Indian fishing rights is a tangled and confusing one, there is one point that is irrefutable. Unless proven conservation methods are practiced, the Great Lakes fishery as we know it will be destroyed. If that happens, millions upon millions of dollars and over 15 years of hard work will have been spent in vain. I can only see that as unacceptable, and to the extent of my power, I will work to prevent that from happening.

Clearly, the situation since Judge Fox handed down his decision is much different than before he acted. Before the decision, there was debate whether or not Indians had unlimited fishing rights. His decision means that until and unless the Judge's decision is overturned, it is now the law, and carries the same weight as any of our other laws.

However, I am pleased that the Attorney General of Michigan has decided to appeal this decision to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati. I firmly believe that unless the Appellate Court changes Judge Fox's decision to ensure that Michigan's Great Lakes fishery is protected, that the Attorney General should pursue Michigan's interest all the way to the Supreme Court of the United States.

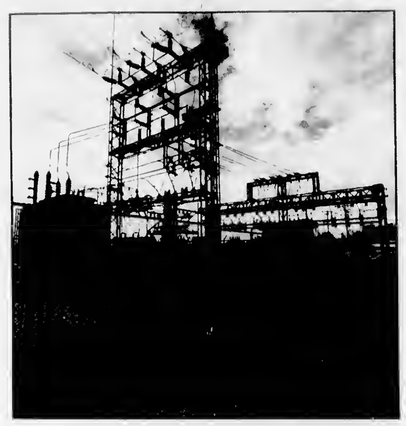
If the courts offer no protection for our embattled fishery, then the next resort is the Congress of the United States. If you have not already done so, I urge you to write the President, the Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives, and the Secretary of the Interior to demand their support of a bill sponsored by our own Congressman, Bob Davis, which would treat Indians and non-Indians alike with respect to fishing on the Great Lakes. Without the passage of Congressman Davis' bill, the state government, the Governor, the Legislature and the Department of Natural Resources will be powerless to act to preserve our fishery on the Great Lakes.

The essence of Judge Fox's decision is to take away the historic right of the State of Michigan to regulate the taking of game, fish and fowl from the jointly-owned resources of our state. I fear that Judge Fox's decision may be only the first step, and may even be the justification for a Federal take-over of the fishing regulations on the Great Lakes.

The prospect worries me and it ought to worry you. I know of nothing, with the possible exception of defense, which the Federal government has done better than state or local governments. To have far-off Washington dispensing fishing licenses and regulating who can take fish and who cannot would be a gigantic step backward, and I, for one, would resist it every step of the way.

These are some of the many aspects of Judge Fox's decision which have brought concern to many segments of Michigan's population – sportsmen and women, the commercial fishing industry, and environmentalists – and I pledge to work with you on this issue as a top priority.

I have been following the accounts of the activities of some other groups, who feel that drastic measures need to be taken to make legislators aware of the broad ramifications of this recent decision. I would like to say to those people that many public officials, at all levels, feel that Judge Fox's decision was the drastic measure, and our attention is fully focused on this matter. In my opinion, violence and vigilante-type groups will only serve to cloud the real issue, and will not aid in any way in finding a resolution to the problem; indeed, this type of action creates additional problems. The type of activity going on here tonight, a public discussion with knowledgeable panel members, is far more constructive and appropriate to the situation. Channeling energies and emotions in this fashion, allowing for exchange of concerns and ideas, is positive communication, and despite the negative impact of the Judge's decision, positive action is the best way to proceed toward resolution either in the higher courts or in Congress."



Increased demand for electricity in the City of Charlevoix has resulted in Consumers Power Company upgrading the substation that provides electricity to the city-owned electric distribution system.

According to John Goense, region general manager for Consumers Power Company's northern region, "we are increasing the capacity of our substation, located in the southern part of the city, by replacing regulators with larger units. We are also adding forced-air cooling to the transformer bank to increase its capacity."

Work on the project began earlier this month and is expected to be completed by June 1. Cost of the upgrading is about $48,000.

Directories expanded to save $

Michigan Bell's 1979 Charlevoix and Emmet counties telephone directories, recently distributed to area customers, have been expanded to provide more consumer information to help customers save money.

Mike Reid, Michigan Bell local manager, said the new expanded directory is in response to customer requests for more information about numerous basic and optional telephone company services.

"Much of the information in the customer guide pages in the front of the new directory is designed specifically to help consumers save money," Reid said.

The directory contains a new page to aid customers in better understanding and interpreting charges and other billing information printed on their telephone bills as well as a new page listing long distance information and the most economical times to call Canada, Alaska and Hawaii, Reid said.

"The consumer information pages have been well received by customers in other cities," Reid said, adding that Michigan Bell now is inserting the new pages in all of its directories.

The Charlevoix and Emmet counties area Yellow Pages is one of the first in the state to have advertisements printed in two colors – black and bright red.

Use of red in Yellow Pages ads is being introduced this year in 18 of Michigan Bell's 75 directories.

Scattered throughout the Yellow Pages section are numerous consumer tips offering useful information such as how to protect yourself and your property, how to reduce home heating costs, how to determine shopping bargains and a host of handy tables for making metric conversions, Reid said.

The consumer tips were developed with the help of the Better Business Bureau, other consumer groups and safety agencies, he said. To make the consumer information even more useful, the last page of the Yellow Pages section is an index on where to find specific consumer tips.

'The Miracle Goes On' Sunday

"The Miracle Goes On" a new feature length dramatic film will be shown at The Community Church of God on Sunday, June 3 at 7 p.m., according to Rev. Walter G. Hastings, pastor.

"The Miracle Goes On" is the life story of composer John W. Peterson, a resident of Phoenix, Arizona, whose music is played and sung throughout the free world and beyond.

John Peterson himself is a prince among men! "The Miracle Goes On" tells his story.

Converted while a Kansas farm boy, John, at age 16, read the benutiful, terrible account of the beheading of missionaries, John and Betty Stam, by rebels in China. He them surrendered his life to God for service and daily, weekly, monthly, through the years, John Peterson has been a faithful, consistent, dedicated Christian whose testimony through music touches the lives of millions.

"The Miracle Goes On", a feature length dramatic film, traces the life of John Peterson through those boyhood days in Kansas, military service as a World War II pilot flying the Himalayan Hump into Burma, student days at the Moody Bible Institute and much, much more.

The film comes to an exciting climax with John appearing in Century II Auditorium in Wichita, Kansas, where Ronn Huff leads a 185 voice choir, a 65 piece concert orchestra, Doug Oldham, Dave Boyer, Lillie Knauls, the Peterson Trio, and TRUTH in a never-to-be forgotten concert of Peterson music.

"The Miracle Goes On" is more than the testimony of a man – it is a stirring and thrilling tribute to the faithfulness of God who works continuing miracles in life that is yielded.

Bill Schroderus, of the City-retained auditing firm of Hill, Woodcock and Olestel, appeared before Council to present a report on the City's cash and other current assets. Mr. Schroderus discussed various aspects of the report with Council and pointed out that the City's cash assets had dropped from $662,262.00, on March 1, 1975, to $75,602.00 on April 1, 1979.

Council discussed a request by the Charlee's shops of Charlevoix to plant a tree in front of their shops at 405 Bridge Street and 209 Bridge Street. Council generally agreed that the request would be more acceptable if the trees were placed in containers rather than cutting away the sidewalk to allow planting in the ground as trees planted permanently in the sidewalk create problems with snow removal during the winter months.

Moved by Councilmen Timms and supported by Councilman Roloff to allow Charlee's to plant a tree in a 3'x3'x2' containers in front of each of their two shops on Bridge Street.

Following further discussion regarding the request by Charlee's, Councilman Timms withdrew his motion. There was no objection to the motion being withdrawn. RESOLUTION 79-5-4

WHEREAS, the Michigan Municipal Finance Commission has reviewed the application for Tax Anticipation Notes of the City of Charlevoix and found the estimated cash flow to be sufficient to repay the notes by September 1, 1979

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED, to change the due date of said notes from March 1, 1980 to September 1, 1979 and that said date allows estimated time for the collection of taxes sufficient for the payment of said notes in full Resolution was adopted by the following yea and nay vote. Yeas Councilmen Roloff, Wood, Muma, Whitley, Porter and Timms. Nays None. Absent: None.

James Mc Garry, a member of the General Public present, presented Council with a list of signatures of local residents interested in maintaining and improving the Michigan Beach area. He stated that the goals of these residents are, (1) Organization of a Clean-up day, (2) Hiring a maintenance crew to clean the beach weekly, (3) Closing the beach road to the pump house, (4) replacement of turf along Park Avenue, (5) Eradication of poison-ivy, and, (6) Commitment by the City to a permanent plan of park maintenance. Following e discussion of the requests, Council agreed to close the road to the pump house each night, as recommended by Police Chief Mol, and to refer the problem of turf replacement to the Acting City Manager and his staff for further study. Council also agreed to let Mr. Mc Garry organize a clean-up day at the beach with the City providing trash bags and a truck to haul away refuse. Mayor Superiaw proclaimed June 2, 1979 as Michigan Beach Park Clean-Up Day in the City. The Acting City Manager advised Mr. Mc Garry that the City is trying to get two employees under the Manpower Program to maintain the beach on a regular basis.

Police Chief Mol reported on the barricading of the alleys running parallel to Dixon Avenue as previously suggested by the Council. He stated that, in his opinion, this idea is not feasible as it would inhibit routine maintenance and emergency vehicle egress. Chief Mol suggested placing "Stop" signs where the alleys intersect the streets and "10 m.p.h." speed limit signs along the alleys as a possible solution to the problem. Council also discussed resuming 2 way traffic on Dixon Avenue as a possible solution to the problem of thru traffic on the alleyways.

Moved by Councilman Timms and supported by Councilman Muma that the speed limit on City alleys be set at 10 m.p.h. and that those alleys running parallel to Dixon Avenue be posted with "Stop" signs where the alleys intersect the City streets.

Motion was adopted by the following yea and nay vote. Yeas Councilmen Roloff, Wood, Muma, Whitley, Porter and Timms Nays None. Absent: None

Moved by Councilman Wood and supported by Councilman Timms to renew the contract for Robert Potter, City Assessor, for one year commencing June 14, 1979 at a salary of $7,700.00 per annum.

The Acting City Manager asked Council's permission to take bids to sell a 1941 road grader and a chain hoist as recommended by the Street Superintendent. Council agreed to have department heads compile a list of these surplus items and to advertise for bids on all items at once.

The Acting City Manager advised Council that the State will send Mr. Mc Sauba within the next two weeks and that he will be available at the facility for watering the new growth.

Council advised the Acting City Manager to check into acquiring land for the purpose of piling dirt streets and alleys in the City. The used oil would be used in lieu of purchasing fuel oil for this purpose due to the present shortage and the high price of oil

Council discussed the completion of the Mr. Mc Sauba project. They agreed to ask Ed Whitley, Electric Department Superintendent, to attend the Committee of the Whole meeting scheduled for May 29, 1979 to present his estimate of the costs involved in completing the project

Alvin Ranger, a local engineer, appeared before Council to discuss the proposed City-Township sewer extension. Mr Ranger stated that he highly recommends the extension be made as it would increase the value of the City property to be serviced and would also provide new utility customers for the City. Mr. Ranger also attended council that Charlevoix Township has been to the DNR regarding construction of their own sewage treatment facility.

The Finance Committee have examined bills totaling $165,163.24 and find them correct and recommend the bills be allowed.

Moved by Councilman Porter and supported by Councilmen Timms that the bills be allowed and orders drawn for their amount

Humane Society stresses importance of animal population control

Verneice Smith is manager of the Charlevoix County Humane Society. This week, the Courier talks with her about what the Society does.

COURIER: How does the Humane Society operate?

SMITH: The County owns the building in which we are located. The County pays for our water, lights, heat, and feed for the large animals. Trustees from the jail help with keeping the large animals and their pens and runs open. The Sheriff's Department also bought the truck which the Animal Control Officer uses to pick up strays. The Humane Society bought the top for the truck.

COURIER: And the Society does the rest?

SMITH: Yes, we maintian the office here. The Society pays my salary and we've had two CETA employees, Sandra Towers and Nancy Lagibah, but we'll soon be losing Nancy. We're open from one to six Mondays through Fridays. The Society bought the furniture in the office here, as well as the stainless steel bowls, stainless steel cages for the puppies and oots, fibre glass resting benches, the refrigerator, and continues to buy vaccines and feed for the puppies and oats. One of our members paid for the ventulating system.

COURIER: What services do you provide the public?

SMITH: We keep the cross index on all licenses issued by the County. The index is by owner and by license number. We keep a file on the rabies shots given at clinics operated by the County. We keep a list of all animals reported lost or found. We keep a book on "wanted" animals, for people who want a special kind of dog or cat. We give kittens and puppies distemper shots. We receive dogs and cats and arrange for adoptions. We sell licenses for any dog sold or redeemed from the Society. We handle the care and feeding of all puppies and cats. We have a lot of paper work, most of it in triplicate, and we answer about 150 phone calls a month, plus making about as many. We also conduct dog shows and dog obedience classes. The new obedience classes storted last week.

COURIER: How do you raise your money?

SMITH: In a number of ways. From memberships, donations, receiving and adopting nut animals the dog shows and obedience classes, tag days, the Christmas open house, the Christmas appeals letter, having booths at local events (last week we sold brownies, coffee, and lemonade at "The Battle of Pine River), We've sold junior memberships at the schools, a very successful project. We get 25 cents for each license we sell. And we've gotten quite a bit of money by saving Glen's Market slips. We do a lot of things to raise our money.

COURIER: What is your annual budget?

SMITH: About $6,500. About $1,000 of this comes from memberships and another $1,000 from the dug shows.

COURIER: Do you have any kind of an education program?

SMITH: Yes, we give tours of the shelter for school children and other interested persons, and we stress the importance of animal population control. Both Or. McGarve in Boyne City and Dr. Norton in Charlevoix will spay or neuter at a reduced price any animol that is taken from the Society.

COURIER: What is the procedure for adopting a dog or cat?

SMITH: It's sumple. People come in and select the one they want and pay the adoption fee and, for dogs, the $8 rabies shot fee. The adoption fee for dogs and puppies is $5, and for cats, $2.50

COURIER: What does it cost to leave an animal at the shelter?

SMITH: $5 for dogs, $2 for puppies, $3 for cats, and $1 for kittens.

COURIER: How many animals do you handle?

SMITH: Ouring the first four months of this year, 133 dogs, 85 puppies, and 48 cats were brought in. Of these, we adopted out 11 dogs, 37 puppies, and 28 cats. Thirty dogs, three puppies, and one cat were redeemed.

COURIER: How many animals do you have on hand now?

SMITH: Ten dogs, 10 puppies, and 21 kittens and cats, a full house. I should mention that June has been set aside as "Adopt a Cat" month. Everyone who adopts a cat will receive three coupons for cat food, an "autographed" picture of Morris the Cat, a document of adoption suitable for framing, and a booklet on cat care.

COURIER: Who brings animals in to you?

SMITH: Harold Thomure, the Animal Control Officer, brings in most of the dogs. All kinds of people bring in cats and puppies and some dogs.

COURIER: Who runs the Humane Society?

SMITH: The Board of Directors and Officers. Landa Snyder of East Jordan is president.

COURIER: How long have you been manager?

SMITH: Since August, 1977. I worked for 12 years fur the Ingham County Humane Society before I moved back up here.

COURIER: When did you leave the area?

SMITH: When I got married, in 1941. I graduated from Charlevoix High School in 1939. My maiden name was Verneice Holland.

COURIER: Where do you live now?

SMITH: In East Jordan I'm a widow now but I have two sons.

Fatality rate up

The fatality rate for pleasure booting accidents reached an all time low in 1978, according to the latest Coast Guard statistics.

These were 9.4 booter deaths for every 100,000 boats in 1978, compared to a fatality rate of 9.6 in 1977, the previous lowest rate.

However, total deaths in boating accidents increased by nine last year. In all, 1,321 boaters died in 1978, up from the 1,312 who died in boating mishaps in 1977. This increase may be partly attributable to the 450,000 more boats estimoted to be on the waterways in 1978 than in 1977.

Some 8,576 boats were involved in 6,529 reported boating accidents throughout the United States. In addition to the fatalities, 1,761 people were injured and $12,301,200 worth of property damage resulted from these accidents. The injury figure is lower than that recorded for 1977, but the amount of property damage is the highest on record, the Coast Guard said.

Department of Social Services does more than provide financial help

The Charlevoix County Department of Social Services (DSS) does more than provide financial assistance.

The department's annual report shows that it is also a service organization which last year serviced 1,944 cases. These included help for qualified children, adults, senior citizens, and families.

Services are broken down into 22 different categories, which Vasco Zucchiatti, services supervisor, described in capsule form for the Courier.

DSS cares for children who are turned over to them by the Probate Court. They may receive juveniles up to age 17 years and six months and have jurisdiction over them to age 19. If the children are removed from their homes, the goal is to return them as soon as possible. In the meantime, they are placed in foster homes, shelter homes, half-way homes, detention facilities, or independent living quarters.

DSS is charged with investigating complaints of suspected abuse or neglect of children. If allegations are substantiated, it must determine whether it would be better to remove the child from home or leave him there. In either case, DSS tries to correct the situation.

Children's foster care homes must be licensed, supervised, and periodically reviewed for continuance of certification. This is another function of DSS.

The placement of children from the Probate Court in foster homes is a serious matter, and DSS has a separate unit which matches children with foster homes so they will be in the most congenial surroundings possible. The same is true of emergency shelter homes, where children may be placed for a maximum of 21 days before going into a regular foster home.

DSS also administers two county programs to stave off delinquency. One is funded by the Federal government, and provides acivities for children from 10 to 15. The other, for approximately the same age group, is funded by the Office of Criminal Justice with small contributions from the state and county. It is an athletic, arts and crafts oriented program to provide an outlet for children in an effort to keep them out of trouble.

In cooperation with the Health Department, DSS has a Periodic Screening and Diagnostic Testing program for children receiving ADC and Medicaid. Any medical problems that are found are referred to appropriate physicians for treatment. Last year, 218 children received this service.

Another county program provides limited foster care for children who do not fall into other programs offered by DSS.

DSS provides foster home care for adults who cannot live independently and who require some supervision and room and board, those who do not have a serious physical or mental disability and who don't need long term care.

As in the case of children, adults must be put in foster homes where the atmosphere is congenial. It is a function of adult workers to determine needs and to find the right homes.

DSS adult workers help those receiving Supplementary Security Income and other low income people in a variety of ways, from money management to home repairs, to health care.

There is also a service for adults who may be abused, neglected, or exploited.

Day care homes for adults must be inspected and licensed. DSS does this, investigating those who would run the homes as well as the physical aspects of each home.

Funds are available to ADC families to provide care for children while the parent works, parents who would not be able to work without this help. Sometimes only part of the cost of child care is needed from DSS.

DSS makes chore services available to families or single adults who need assistance with every-day problems, including the preparation of meals. Such services are provided to keep people under the least restrictive care possible. The cost of such services are often paid for, at least partially, by the recipients.

DSS has a Work Incentive Program in cooperation with the Michigan Employment Security Commission (MESC), who work together to try to find employment for ADC families.

Charlevoix County is one of six counties in the state in which there is a pilot program to assure adults they will receive the least restrictive care their physical or mental conditions require. DSS assesses their needs to determine if it should be adult foster care, chore services, or another type of care. This assessment is a joint effort of a team consisting of the services supervisor, adult comprehensive care worker, public health nurse, and medical social worker.

There is a special services coordinator at DSS whose job it is to recruit and organize volunteers to provide supportive services to DSS recipients. Such services may be as small as a friendly phone call.

Charlevoix County DSS has a limited funded dental program which assists children and adults who are on ADC or are in a very low income category. It also has a limited funded program to help clients participate in weight loss programs to improve their health, appearance, and chances of finding employment.

To help provide these services, there are 15 adult foster care homes in the county with a total capacity of 61. The homes are usually filled to 95 percent capacity. There are also 43 day care homes and 66 day care aides for children, as well as 15 children's foster care homes with a capacity of 26 children.

The Rathbun Emergency Shelter Home in East Jordan provided 553 days of care last year. As a two-bed shelter home, it functioned at 76 percent of capacity.

FAITH MAKES GOOD NEIGHBORS OF GREAT NATIONS

The boundary line dividing two countries can become a barricade of mutual hostility; but in the case of Canada and the United States it has always served as a bridge of friendship between two peoples with such trust, respect and understanding as to make the celebration of Canada-U.S. Goodwill Week quite unnecessary. Nowhere along the three thousand-mile borderline that spans our continent have security measures even been needed, and the citizens on both sides may enter and leave each other's land whenever they wish. This is a fine example of the spirit of brotherhood that has been taught by every religious faith, in every land. Wherever you live, you will learn this by attending the Church of your choice.

"Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. Love worketh no ill to his neighbor: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law."
-Romans 13:9, 10

A living proof to all the world of faith in brotherhood.

Two historical groups plan picnic-workshop

Members of the Charlevoix Historical Society are invited by the East Jordan Historical Society to attend a picnic-workshop at the Elm Point (East Jordan) Museum at 11:00 A.M. on Tuesday, June 12.

Exhibits will be viewed and Mrs. Cyg Riley, assisted by others in the East Jordan group, will explain the organization and operation of their museum. Their experience is of special interest at this time to those who are concerned with developing a museum in Charlevoix.

The meeting at Elm Point followed by a short business session replaces the regular June meeting of the Charlevoix Historical Society originally held on the first Tuesday of the month. Bring a picnic lunch. Coffee will be furnished by the hosts.

Mushroom hunters have come to northern Michigan in droves, reports CHARLES RICH of the DNR.

Rich says "large numbers of morel mushroom pickers have been in the area lately. And many of these people, he adds, are from out of state (Kentucky, Illinois, Ohio and Indiana).

"Many areas report more mushroom pickers than we have deer hunters," he says.

How successful have the mushroom pickers been?

"Generally good on both blacks and whites."

On fishing, Rich says "fair" catches of brook, brown and rainbow trout are being taken on wet flies and line bait on area trout streams. He says the best success is between 6 p.m. and 10 p.m.

Bluegills, sunfish and rock bass are moving into shallow water to spawn, he adds. Also, the new 1979 molel whitetail deer are being born now and people are reminded to leave these animals where you see them, he says, they are not lost.

GOV. WILLIAM MILLIKEN will dedicate the new Michigan Northern Railway siding to the AMOCO plant in Kalkaska Thursday.

This siding will generate $6,000 per day in freight revenue for the railroad, GERRY ZIMMERMAN vice president-marketing, says.

"This is the sort of business we need to remove ourselves from subsidy and become self sufficient," he said. "We expect this to be just the beginning of the development of traffic at stations along our railroad."

Michigan Northern provides rail freight service from Grand Rapids to Mackinaw City. In the three years it has operated, its traffic has increased from 2,200 cars per year to 7,000 cars per year. This year the small railroad hopes to reach 12,500 cars.

According to Zimmerman, Michigan Northern is convinced that as energy becomes scarce there will be a growing need for rail service. Railroads are four and a half times as efficient as trucks in the use of fuel, Zimmerman adds, and the railroad is working very aggressively to increase traffic so that it becomes profitable and is here long into the future.

KEN SWAN'S pencil-portrait of King James Strang will be exhibited at the Beaver Island Museum.

"Being actively interested in Michigan history, I had the chance to participate in a program involving research into the life of James Strang...Through this research I developed an impression of him that had to be expressed," Swan said.

"This penciled portrait is the result of a feeling...a feeling for and about one of the most unique personalities of 19th century America, James Jesse Strang, the Mormon King."

The museum is located in the original Mormon print shop. Strang ruled his Mormon kingdom on the island from the mid-1840s until 1856 when he was assassinated.

Swan is a graphic specialist in the Char-Em Intermediate School District.

The American Legion has presented $115 to the U.S. Olympic Fund to help pay for training expenses of U.S. athletes. The $115 was raised from a recent pancake breakfast. George Lochner is shown here with Col. Joseph Seidel (U.S. Army Ret.). Col. Seidel said he hopes other state and organizations will also support the Olympic Fund so "our athletes know that we're behind them when they go to Moscow in 1980."

As drum major of the Charlevoix High School Marching Band, it's Steve Landon's job to take charge and lead the band through its routine.

Wednesday, Landon found himself in a similar role. This time he was acting as conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra.

The orchestra completed a four day, eight concert tour of public schools in out-state Michigan last week. The orchestra was divided into two smaller orchestras for the tour – each playing at four schools. On Wednesday half of the orchestra played at Charlevoix High School.

After playing movements by Mendelssohn and Tchaikovsky, among others, and the theme song from "Rocky" conductor Teri Murai stepped down from the podium and asked if anyone in the audience wanted to take his place. Six students responded. And for a brief moment they took turns conducting the internationally known orchestra.

Roy Fortin named principal at Merrill

The Charlevoix Board of Education, at its regular meeting Monday night, accepted two resignations, heard reports on the proposed millage election and on the high school addition and accepted a gift among other items of business.

The board accepted the resignation of Roy M. Fortin as assistant principal and William Murray as high school art teacher. Mr. Fortin who has been with the school for seven years, has accepted a position as high school principal at Merrill. Murray, who has been on the faculty for nine years, is leaving the teaching profession to enter the business world. Both resignations were accepted with regrets.

In speaking of the upcoming millare election, Supt. Gordon W. VanWieren emphasized that the six mills on which the voters of the district will vote Monday is a renewal of millage that expires at this time. He also urged that everyone vote on Monday.

At the same time, voters will cast their ballots for two members of the board. Charles A. Elzinga is seeking re-election to a four-year term to succeed himself. Elaine Martin and Dennis Kusina are seeking election to the un-expired term of three years.

The polls at the Charlevoix Elementary School will be open from 7 a.m. until 8 p.m. on Monday, June 11.

In reporting on the high school addition, Supt. VanWieren said that all necessary information is in the office of Michigan Finance Commission and that the project may gain a week at this point. He also said the architects are working on final plans.

A resolution relating to a program for gifted/talented children was approved by the board. In approving t resolution, the board gives its support to the enncept that it is the responsibility of educators to recognize and develop the special gift a child might have artistically, academically, creatively, vocationally or athletically.

Approval was also given the by-laws adopted by the Charlevoix Public Library Committee Advisory Committee which will serve as a liaison between the public, the library staff and the school board. The board is comprised of five persons interested in the library and what it should offer the community it serves.

The board also approved the membership resolution to the Michigan High School Athletic Association, Inc., for the year Aug. 1, 1979 until July 31, 1980. This is a resolution that is approved annually.

The board acknowledged, with gratitude, a gift from William W. Joseph, a Cincinnati artist and a summer resident here, who has presented an art gift to the school district.

Lynne DeMoor, president of the Student Council during the current school, reported on the year's activities of the organization.

Debra Tollas, who was given permission to attend North Central Michigan College while attending classes at the Charlevoix High School, appeared to thank the board for permitting her to have a dual enrollment.

The next meeting of the board is scheduled for June 18.

The board then went into executive session to discuss staffing for the 1979-80 school year.

Millage, school board race to be decided Monday

Dennis Kusina

Voters in the Charlevoix School District will go to the polls Monday to vote on a renewal of six mills for operation of the schools and to elect two people to the board of education.

Elaine Martin and Dennis Kusina are seeking to fill the unexpired term of Jim Haggard. The term has three years remaining. Meanwhile, Charles Elzinga, an incumbent, is the lone candidate for the four year term.

Polls at the elementary school will be open from 7 a.m. until 8 p.m.

The request for six mills to operate the schools is for one year. Although the cost of operation has increased, Superintendent Gordon VanWieren said, the board of education has decided that "by austere spending an increase in millage would not be required.

"We owe it to the public to ask for only a renewal and to see if we can get by with that," he said.

VanWieren said several adjustments will be made even if the six mills passes. The most notable adjustment will be the reduction of staff. Van Wieren said 1½ to 2½ teaching positions at the high school will be reduced while 1 teaching position at the middle school will be cut. He cited declining enrollment – and the tight budget – as the primary reasons for the cutback.

In addition, he said, CETA funds have dried up. Without CETA funds, he added, three teacher aides, an administrative assistant and a clerk will be released. Also, three custodians – who were paid with CETA funds – will now be paid from the general fund.

Business Manager Vince Olach said even with the six mill renewal "there will be nothing to play with."

Olach said the six mills will generate approximately $67,000 in additional funds.

"It's going to be difficult," Olach said. "There are probably going to be a lot of sleepless nights because there are a lot of things we don't have control over (cost of insurance, utilities, books, etc.) and this is a very tight budget.

Olach said cost containment policies have been implemented (beat in buildings reduced, windows caulked, more efficient lightbulbs, etc.) to help curb inflationary costs.

In the contested school board race, voters must decide between two people who seem pleased with the educational system here.

"I don't have any axe to grind," said Elaine Martin. "I have the time and energy and this is something I want to do.

"I'm from here, which I think helps, and I have a banking background, which I think would be an asset to the board."

Mrs. Martin said she has a lot to learn about the school system, but is "willing to learn."

She has two sons who are graduates of Charlevoix – Clare T. and Kevin.

"I've been a supporter of Charlevoix all my life," Mrs. Martin said. "The school system included."

Mrs. Martin works at First State Bank.

Dennis Kusina is a candidate for the board because he "wants to make sure the quality of education remains good.

"The greatest asset in a community is its school system," he said.

Kusina said he is happy with board policy, but that he would like to see an accelerated program for students planning to attend college. He also said he would like to see the board work with state legislators in an effort to change school financing.

Kusina said the board "has done a good job" communicating with the public. This was one concern he had a year ago when he was a candidate for the board.

"I think the reason the bond issue passed (for building addition of high school) was because the public was well informed. The board did a good job and came up with something the public wanted. Unfortunately, a mistake (in design) was made when the high school was first built."

Kusina works at Kusina Motors. His wife, Peggy, teaches at the Petoskey Middle School and operates Kids Korner, which sells teaching supplies.

Electric rates discussed; two turn down manager's job

Should the Charlevoix Area Hospital pay the city 5½ cents per kilowatt hour for electricity because it's in Charlevoix Township?

Or should the hospital pay the city rate of 4 cents per kilowatt hour because it's a "quasi-public institution" which serves residents of the city?

That, in essence, was the focal point of conversation at Monday night's Charlevoix City meeting.

The issue is relatively new. Until recently the city charged all its customers – whether in the city or not – 4 cents per kilowatt hour for electricity. But a review of the electric fund showed a deficit of about $80,000. In an effort to increase revenue and make the fund self-supporting, council increased the fee by 1½ cents per kilowatt hour to non-residents.

"The fund was in the red," Mayor Sam Supernaw explained. "Residents here were subsidizing the fund. Customers outside the city got the same rate yet they didn't have to pay taxes (to city)."

The question now before council is: Should Charlevoix Area Hospital be exempt ?

According to Richard Krueger, hospital administrator, the 1½ cent rate hike will increase the hospital electric bill by roughly $38,500 a year if electrical consumption stays about the same. But, Krueger said, with expansion and remodeling at the hospital consumption could triple. A lot depends, he said, on how extensive the "air handling equipment" is in the renovation. Before the equipment is installed, hospital officials want to know how much it will cost to operate. Krueger said the hospital uses about 2½ million kilowatts a year.

If council sticks to its 5½ cent per kilowatt charge, Krueger indicated the hospital might look elsewhere for its power. He said both Consumers Power and Top O' Michigan offer Cheaper rates.

Council is having the rates reviewed and should have a recommendation from its advisor in a month or so.

In other action, Mayor Sam Supernaw said five candidates have been interviewed for the city manager's job. Supernaw said council was impressed with two of the candidates, but that both had turned the job down. He said council will decide soon if it is interested in one of the other three candidates. Right now, he said, it's at a "standstill."

In other action, council:

* Agreed to extend the sewer line at the U.S. 31 and M-66 intersection south along U.S. 31 into Charlevoix Township to the railroad tracks. The final drawings must be approved by the city engineer. Only one hook-up will be allowed per plotted lot. The township will be responsible for paying the entire cost (already agreed upon) and the sewer line will be turned over to the city upon completion. Rates will be established by council upon completion.

* Approved a variance request for Captain's Watch to allow for a carport.

* Awarded Haggard's Plumbing and Heating the bid (slightly over $10,000) for the Lake Michigan Beach bathhouse project.

* Approved a request from WJMI, to hold a Hawaiian Tropic Weekend on Ferry Beach on July 14 from noon to 8 p.m. The approval is contingent on a certificate of insurance by the sponsor

* Approved transferring service credits with M.E.R.S. for acting City Manager James Brinker.

* Learned that the ski hill at Mt. McSauba has been seeded.

* Received an invitation to attend the Michigan Air Tour ceremony at the Charlevoix Airport.

Seventy-five aircraft will take-off from Pontiac on June 11 and visit 70 Michigan cities before terminating at Lansing on June 15.

This is Robert Purdy's Veri Eze plane that landed in Charlevoix over the Memorial Day weekend. It is 16 feet long with a 23 foot wingspan.

The 'little bird' flies high; and it gets 30-35 mpg

By SARA GAY DAMMANN
Special to the Courier

One of the smallest – if not the smallest – planes ever to visit the Charlevoix Airport flew in here Memorial Day weekend.

On its maiden flight, it was piloted by Robert Purdy, 59, who with his wife Margot, had flown up from Carbondale, Ill., to spend the weekend with her mother, Mrs. Ethel Wiesinger and sister Mrs. Edith Gilbert.

The Purdys believe the plane, which took him some 2,000 hours to construct – "the little bird" so labeled by Mrs. Wiesinger – may be the answer to how to travel in this era of diminishing gas supplies.

Almost small enough to park under a bush in the back yard the machine flies at from 150 to 160 mph consuming a gallon of gasoline every 30 to 35 miles.

A pusher type plane, it is driven by a 100 horsepower Continental aircraft engine which Purdy had removed from another plane. It is a two-passenger aircraft with the pilot and his passenger sitting in a semi-reclining position in tandem, the passenger behind the pilot.

Called the Veri Eze the plane is made of styrofoam fiberglass is 16 feet long with a wingspread of 23 feet. Its propellor diameter is 56 inches.

The plane was designed by a young aeronautical engineer, Burt Rutan, whose innovative revolutionary design has created a stir in the industry, and who to date has concentrated on selling his designs to home aircraft builders.

According to Purdy, Rutan has sold some 3,000 to 4,000 designs and more than 100 Veri Ezes are now flying in the nation.

Purdy, a native of the Detroit area, a machine tool maker and vocational training tracher, was a bomber pilot in the European theatre during World War II. He was shot down over Italy and spent a year and a half as a prisoner of war.

He says it took him two and a half years to build the plane.

Two days after receiving his Airworthiness Certificate the Pordy's – she has a PHD in Public Health and is on the faculty of the University of Southern Illinois in Carbondale, – flew up to Charlevoix.

"We stopped in Chicago to see a play," they said, adding that the flight up Lake Michigan took only two hours.

Fifty-two percent of senior class college bound

For the third consecutive year, more than 50 percent of Charlevoix High School's senior class plan to attend college.

A survey of the 152 seniors indicate that 78 (52 percent) plan on continuing their education. Of this number, 60 (40 percent) will be enrolled in baccalaureate programs. The remaining 18 will be enrolled in programs that are initially two years or less, but may lead to further study.

An analysis of the past five years shows that the Class of '79 has a higher percentage of students who are going for baccalaureate level degrees than any other class.

	4 Year Programs	2 Year Programs	College Bound
1975	28%	21%	49%
1976	31%	16%	47%
1977	38%	14%	52%
1978	34%	22%	56%
1979	40%	12%	52%

Seventeen of the college bound students have not yet decided on a college major, a relatively common situation with today's students. Thirty students have plans to enter programs in engineering or math/science. Another 19 have indicated planned study in social service areas. Finally, 12 students plan to pursue studies in business associated areas.

Five students have indicated that they have made a commitment to the armed services after graduation. Other students have indicated that they may enbst if their job plans do not work out satisfactorily.

Of the remaining 69 students, 32 indicate that they now have jobs and will continue with that job; another 19 have jobs now but would like to change to another job; and 17 are currently seeking employment. The counseling staff has been working with these students in an attempt to help them find a job.

In the past five years, many graduates of Charlevoix High School have tended to enroll at North Central Michigan College, Central Michigan University, Ferris State College or Michigan State University. This year, these four institutions account for 38 of the 77 students going on to college. Of a total of 357 students who planned on college upon graduation, 179 have initially enrolled at one of these four schools.

Centennial stamp used

Charlevoix's centennial year is being acknowledged by the Post Office Department through the use of a special cancellation stamp.

Reading, "Charlevoix Centennial – 1879 to 1979 – Battle of Pine River", the stamp will be used on all mail with a Charlevoix postmark.

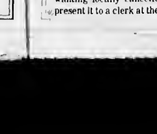
Charlevoix Postmaster Joe Schwartzfisher says that as much mail as possible will be cancelled in Charlevoix.

"We will do all we can, especially early in the day," he explained, "but we don't have the manpower to cancel all the mail." That which isn't cancelled in Charlevoix is sent to Gaylord for processing.

Schwartzfisher also said that those wanting locally cancelled mail should present it to a clerk at the window.

Special cancellation stamps such as Charlevoix's are noted in stamp collector's publications and are much sought after by collectors. Schwartzfisher reports that he has already received "70 or 80" requests for cancellations from collectors all over the United States and Canada.

The Centennial Stamp was requested by Dave Phillips of Charlevoix, who headed the Centennial Committee. Approval by the United States Post Office Department in Washington was required before the stamp could be issued.



Sister Josine leaving

St. Mary's will have a new principal for the 1979-80 school year. Sister Josine, who has been principal for six years, is leaving to teach at Mt. Pleasant Sacred Heart.

Sister Josine, who also teaches second grade, will leave for Grand Rapids at the conclusion of the school year and work as a "nurses aide" at the Marywood Dominican Residence. In the fall, she'll teach in the elementary school at Sacred Heart.

Mt. Pleasant is just 20 miles from Beal City, Sister Josine's hometown. Proximity to home is one of the "nice" features of her new assignment.

"It will be nice to be close to mom and dad," she said. "I'll spend some time at home this summer. I'll probably work a lot in the garden.

"I grew up on a farm. I enjoy getting out."

Sister Josine has lived in northern Michigan for the past 13 years. Prior to coming to Charlevoix, she taught at Gaylord St. Mary's and Lake Leelanau St. Mary's.

Her stay here, she says, has been enjoyable and interesting.

"I've enjoyed it here," she said. "The people have been very cooperative.

"In a school this size (enrollment is 71) parents have to get involved. We depend on their support. It's like one big family.

"We try to do as much individualized teaching as possible so that we can be sure the needs are being met and that everybody is doing what he or she can handle."

Parishoners help out in several ways. One good example is in the library were volunteers work. In addition, the Guild continually updates the reading material.

In Sister Josine's six years here, St. Mary's has started a music program (hiring a part-time music teacher), has updated the text books (this year there were new math books for all students and new religion books for grades 1-3) and has worked closely with the Charlevoix Public Schools on curriculum (6th graders are in the Charlevoix Middle School band program, the high school gymnasium is used for physical education, etc.)

It is not known yet if Sister Josine will teach a second grade class or a combined second and third grade class at Sacred Heart.

"It will depend upon the enrollment," she said. "I've taught both. And there are pros and cons both ways. I think the different levels learn from each other, but I also know it is easier to teach just one group."

Something to crow about!

By ANNE KELLY
Special to the Courier

The Mike Seymour family of Charlevoix has something to crow about, and if they don't, "Jim Crow" will do it himself.

The pet crow who found his way into the Seymour's resale shop as a caged baby, is by now, a year later, a neighborhood establishment.

If you're out for a morning jog, you might hear Jim laughing at your style along the way. A neighbor reports that she was alarmed by someone talking outside her second floor bedroom window. It was "peeping Jim." Jim makes some very audible human sounds and surprises the Seymour's with his uncanny ability to recognize the family away from home.

Jim has been known to single first grader Chris out of an entire elementary school playground of children and sit on his shoulder. He has even hitched a ride home in the family car when he strayed too far from his roost. A few residents said it made them a bit uneasy to be stalked by a swooping crow, but most are delighted to have a unique pet for a neighbor.

Conserve gasoline, walk or bike in a parade

Editor:

As I watched the Centennial Parade on Saturday, I could not help thinking what a car-dominated society we have become. When I was a child, a parade meant people; nowadays, it means a procession of cars. How are we ever going to teach our children that there is a lifestyle that does not depend totally on the automobile?

At a time when we are being asked to conserve gasoline, I see no reason why city officials could not have walked, or even bicycled, along the parade route.

Sincerely yours,
Janet Riley

A bill to remove local and state control

Senator Robert W. Davis
House Office Budding
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Bob:

A bill was passed in the Senate to create the U.S. Department of Education, and I understand that this bill is now up for consideration in the House.

I understand that you are in favor of this bill.

I remember that you emphatically stated your opposition to the power of the N.E.A. when you told me that we did not need another N.E.A. man in Washington during your campaign.

This bill is an attempt to remove all control from states and local school districts, and is just one more attempt by the N.E.A. to grab total power over education.

Will you please reconsider your stand on this issue, and help dissuade other congressmen from voting for this bill?

Please let me know your decision on this.

Sincerely yours,
Richard Friske

A rare glimpse of Poland

If there is a social, moral or intellectual lesson to be learned from the visit of Pope John Paul II to his Communist-controlled humeland, Poland, it eludes me for the moment.

The very spectacle of a Polish-born pontiff paradiug in the streets of Warsaw and receiving any kind of a reception at all — much less a warm one — from the Marxist regime, staggers the imagination. What other surprises does this world hold in the dying days of the 20th Century

Certainly there is no reason to doubt the sincerity of the spontaneous welcome afforded the Pope by the masses of Poland. The population for centuries has been devoutly Catholic. What is amazing is that religious feeling still runs so high in Poland after 35 years of governmental disdain.

Either the leadership has done a mighty poor job of instilling atheism in the people, or the people are slow learners.

Another possible answer is that the leaders themselves aren't all that sold on godless materialism as a way of life. Dr quite possibly they are using a policy of religious tolerance to strengthen their own fort.

Whatever the reason, I'll bet the Pope was as surprised as anyone when President Henry Jablonski met him at the airport.

The real measure of the Pope's visit to Poland, of course, will come after he leaves. Will the communist government continue its anti-religious stance or will it accept the fact that the Catholic church is too deeply rooted in Poland to ever suffer more than a temporary setback, regardless of who holds the reins of power?.

In the meantime, official Poland is welcoming the Pope as the head of state of another government — Vatican City. But to millions of Poles, he is still the Pope. And he is one of their own.

Needless to say, Poland will lie in a festival mood for the nine days of the Pope's visit. And although the government has imposed a ban on the sale of beer and vodka during the Pope's homecoming, I would imagine serious drinkers would be able to latch onto emergeney rations without a great deal of trouble.

The Pope's visit also is giving the outside world a rare glimpse of life inside Poland today. I was surprised to find the populace generally healthy-looking and well clothed. The women seem to go in for gay prints and the men are partial to white shirts, open at the neck.

The Polish government, moreover, has found it necessary to impose parking bans along the Pope's motorcade routes. I didn't think there were enough cars in Poland to create parking problems but apparently I was mistaken.

All in all, Poland is in a festival mood and it would be fun to be aboard for the duration of the Pope's visit.

After seven months of hibernation imposed by inclement weather, I have finally managed to spend a whole weekend puttering about the backyard - and I have the sunburn to prove it.

In case you didn't notice, this past weekend was our first "really nice" weekend since October and Charlevoixans made the most of it.

It was fun to turn over the garden soil, yank out weeds, and stake out rows for the green beans and the Chinese cabbage. I also set out a dozen Vallant tomato plants from Olesen's. Cutworms are usually a problem for tomato plants the first night they are in the ground, but these little fellows were hale and hearty by dawn's early light Monday so the wurst is over.

Now all we have to du is water them, fertilize them, cultivate them and tie them to their respective stakes as they grow – and they should provide us with six weeks of fine eating come September.

Of course, there'll be chili sauce all of next winter, when snow again stands waist deep in the garden patch.

The presidential primary

The debate over whether Michigan will have a presidential primary in 1980, as it had in 1972 and 1976, continued in the Michigan House of Representatives last week as the House Elections voted 8-4 to report out a bill that would abolish the primary.

As you may know, the primary is estimated to cost between $3 and $4 million in 1980, and there is a growing feeling that spending much money may not be worth the results.

This sense of wasting money was heightened when the Michigan State Democratic Chairman, Morley Winograd, told the committee members that unless changes dictated by the Democratic National Committee were made in the Michigan primary, his party would boycott the election. This would result in having the primary election benefit only one party, the Republicans, if we continue it in 1980.

This situation is not acceptable to me or my Republican colleagues on the Elections Committee. We believe that elections should be held for all voters, not just for one political party, whether, it's our own or not.

We also believe that Mr. Winograd's demands are not acceptable to the people of Michigan, because he requested that before entering the polling booth, voters would be asked, "Are you voting in the Democrat or Republican primary?"

In my view, if this requirement had been adopted, it would destroy the confidentiality of the election process, and would subject individuals to pressure tactics from political parties and interest groups.

Under these circumstances, it appears the only alternative is to abolish the presidential primary if Mr. Winograd and his party maintain their current position. So far, we have been told that Michigan must have a so-called "closed" primary in order to satisfy the Democratic National Committee. I think we should have the primary if the people want it continued, but not when one political party is making up the rules for it, and essentially saying, "we won't play if you don't do it our way."

Actually, I do believe that besides saving the $3-4 million, the elimination of the primary would strengthen the two-party sytem. Elimination of the party would permit the respective parties to build their organizations around general principles, rather than permitted special interests to build coalitious beiind speeific candidates.

There is also the argument that in the two presidential primaries Michigan has held, the results have meant little in terms of actual delegate counts at the national conventions. After all, the main reason for holding the primary is to select delegates to the Democrat and Republican national conventions.

For example, in 1976 Jimmy Carter won the Michigan primary with 43% of the vote, compared to Congressman Morris Udall's 42%. Yet, when the Michigan delegation to the Democratic national convention assemhied in New York, Mr. Carter claimed 65% of the delegates.

Some have suggested that Michigan should combine the May presidential primary with the August primary for congressional, state and local offices and hold it in June. This option would save the millions of dollars now being spent on the presidential primary. In addition, it would permit those parties who wish to utilize the primary for delegate selecion, bke the Republicans, to do so with very little additional cost to the pubbc.

When the bill to abolish the presidential primary for 1980 comes before the full House, I will vote for it. Given the present situation, there seems very little prospect that it will give Michigan voters the opportunity to select the delegates to both parties' national conventions for nominating presidential candidates.

Warrant sought

The Charlevoix County Sheriff's Department is seeking a warrant to arrest a Kalkaska County resident in connection with a hil and run accident Thursday. Officials say Karen Murdick of Charlevoix was struck from behind by a blue van. Miss Murdick's vechiice left the road, hit a post and rolled over. She is still hospitalized.

Sheriff George Lasater said tips from area citizens were instrumental in locating the suspect.

The necessity of Amtrak

WASHINGTON – It was more luck than a gift of immediate prophecy that what I wrote six weeks ago about fuel shortages forcing people from their cars into trains is happening in spades right now.

Amtrak, everybody's scapegoat, is swamped with passengers and people who want to become passengers quick, only they can't get through on the phone. This gasoline crisis, particularly in California, is a vivid preview of the time when people will have to count on taking trains, period, because gasoline costs and availability will weigh heavily against motorists making medium and long distance trips.

It should be as plain as the nose on Jimmy Carter's face that the United States of America will need a passenger railroad system in place when we move into the era when our cars will no longer be able to bathe in gasoline.

And yet this realization coincides with the strong move by the Department of Transportation to cut back Amtrack service, thus weakening this already patched-up rail passenger system. Congress still has time to pass amendments to this eviseerating D.O.T. plan.

Meanwhile, Amtrak suffers from a dose of heavy ambivalence. It is thrilling to be overrun with passengers, but it's no fun to see the disappointment on their faces when they board some of the equipment.

Amtrak is frustrated to realize that scores of millions of Americans who only use Amtrak in emergencies, believe there is always a first-class rail system waiting for them to use. So when they use it in such emergencies as now, many go away saying they won't use it again.

This reaction only gives the anti-rail passenger crowd arguments why Amtrak should be cut more, and perhaps even eliminated, i.e., the people don't use it, and when they do, they don't like it.

Consider. Amtrak's reservation computer center at Philadelphia. Nearly two million phone calls were placed to the center of May 14th, six times as many placed the same week a year ago. But only 448,796 got through. The telephone company warned Amtrak that it was overloading the Philadelphia area's long-distance capacity and making life miserable for other customers.

Consider California where passengers must stand on Amtrak's Los Angeles-San Diego trains, 12 of them a day. Consider that Amtrak bookings were up 14 percent in April, and that this jerry-built rail system is headed for a record year with 22 million passengers likely.

Now, there is a strong anti-Amtrak lobby comprised of super Proposition 13 types, bus companies and perhaps even the railroads. They can argue that: Amtrak doesn't operate one single line in the black; Amtrak used up $4.2 billion in subsidies in eight years and didn't come up with a good rail system; ridership has not increased fast enough; it would be cheaper to buy free bus or airplane tickets for most Amtrak passengers, since each rail passenger is so heavily subsidized.

Most of these arguments are valid simply because Amtrak has never been funded sufficiently or given assurance that it is here to stay. The bus companies have a right to resent some of Amtrak's funding (though buses ride on subsidized highways), but would be better served to integrate with Amtrak's schedules, providing bus service to pick where Amtrak ends.

As for the railroads who bellyache about the federal bucks spent on other modes of transportation, they shouldn't be knocking Amtrak, the dummies, because Amtrak is also in the railroad business.

When trains are two-thirds or more filled with passengers, there is no more energy efficient transportation system going. The other day, Amtrak president Alan S. Boyd spoke to employees and told them that Amtrak – the way it has had to operate – is not energy efficient, but that train systems with good passenger loads, are.

Congress, which moves like an elephant this year, it has come around a little on Amtrak. Sen. Frank Church made the best move when he asked Senate Leader Robert Byrd to hold authorization on the cutdown Amtrak bill until after the upcoming recess, thus giving congressmen a chance to hear what people think back home.

Church not only wants to save rail service in Idaho, but across the country, too, because he feels there must be a national rail system ready when gasoline shortages become permanent.

The Administration wants to cut $1.4 billion from Amtrak's budget in the next five years, and with it, 12,000 miles of route. Several amendments to the Amtrak bill amount to saving service on a half-dozen long distance routes and a number of commuter runs.

There is no reason a nation as strong and resourceful as the U.S. should not have a rail passenger system to be proud of. A capital improvement like a first-class rail system serves the national interest in many ways.

By saving energy; by providing cheap transportation to low and middle-income people; by improving the environment; in making good transportation available to budget-conscious foreign tourists and Americans traveling on business or for a holiday; and by providing a service for all those people who don't have cars and can't afford planes.

There's no reason in the world why we can't have highspeed trains making the Washington-New York run in two hours; the New York-Philadelphia run in one hour; and Boston-New York in little more than two hours. No reason, either, why trains can't make it from Detroit to Chicago in three hours, or from St. Louis to Chicago in the same time.

The technology is with us, but do we have the will?

Float had historical significance

One of most original floats in the Charlevoix Centennial parade was the team-drawn entry of the Charlevoix Historical Society.

The float was designed and built by society member Dale Boss, assisted by members of his family.

The five women and two men riding on the float wore constumes representing periods in past American history and people who lived during those periods.

According to Bernice (Mrs. Arthur) Wexstaff, those people were:

Eloise (Mrs. John) LaRue, who represented her husband's Revolutionary War ancestress, Ruth Andrews Simmons.

Louise (Mrs. Edward) Beutner, who represented her own ancestress, wife of Jonathan Chandler, a soldier in the Revolutionary War, as well as Penelope Padgett Barker, a patriot who refused the British demand of the use of her horse barn.

Mary Margaret Geiken, who wore the well-preserved clothing of her deceased husband's sister, Pleasant Geiken, representing the late 19th and early 20th century.

Mrs. Wexstaff, who represented her own ancestress, Mary Crandall, a Colonial lady of the early 17th century, as well as Molly Pitcher of Revnlutionary War fame. Mrs. Wexstaff's skirt was fashioned from quilt pieces sewed together by her Charlevoix pioneer grandmother, Lydia Nowland Ward, and her blouse was made from an old crinkle bedspread of about the same vintage.

Doris Saunders, who represented her Revolutionary War ancestress, Anna Hammond Pope, daughter of Col. Benjamin Hammond and also the wife of the Congregational minister, Rev. Pope of Massachusetts.

Robert Burns, local attorney, who wore frontiersman's garb of pioneer days.

Edward Beutner, who represented the U. S. Geological Survey Centennial in his outdoorsman's outfit of the geologist.

A community park for Bay Shore?

In its quest to provide recreational facilities for young people in the area, the Charlevoix-Emmet Youth Activties Program has focused on the needs of Bay Shore.

Mike Davis, director of the Youth Activities Program, recently reported to the Charlevoix County Board of Commissioners that Bay Shore represents a particularly unique problem because the village houses an Air Force Radar Tracking Station, resulting in a substantial number of young families.

"(There is) the lack of available space (i.e., public recreation land), to hold organized, or even unorganized, recreational events," Davis said in his report.

Bay Shore is divided in the center by Townline Road, leaving the east half in Resort Township (Emmet County), and the west half in Hayes Township (Charlevoix County). Davis says he has approached both the Hayes and Resort Township Boards about developing a Bay Shore park. He has also asked the Charlevoix and Emmet County Planning Departments "to seek and evaluate possible park land sites in the Bay Shore area."

After the studies by the Planning Department are completed, Davis will approach the township boards again, but in the meantime he has prepared a sketch showing what might be done if and when land and funding becomes available.

A look at Garp

I remember that fateful day in high school P.O.D. class as if it were yesterday. Or, more accurately, I remember the smell of that day.

P.O.D. was the code word for Problems of a Democracy. One of the basic problems in my 18 year old democracy was having to endure P.O.D. under the tutelage of a very austere Mrs. Prendergast, who had ample freckles, ample chins but absolutely no sense of humor. She must never have learned the preamble of any democracy: a sense of humor in a sense of sanity in life as well as in government. In P.O.D., someone was always devising ways and means of livening up at least pre-class sessions, the time spent waiting for Mrs. Prendergast to stalk into 7th period. Being a heterogeneous group, there were always plenty of ideas floating around. I can't remember ever running out.

"Let's toss around an orange." was the suggestion of the day. A hook shot to the lookout, followed by a grounder duwn aisle two, the recipient of which relayed a blooper to me. My shot was a line drive against the pale yellow cement block wall resulting in a splot and the smell of orange as it can only smell when illegally released in a classroom. Enter Mrs. Prendergast. I don't remember the outcome, only the feeling in the pit of my stomach – and the smell.

Someone at our last book group meeting came up with a suggestion. I think it was me. "Let's toss around Garp," I offered, "it surely has gotten good reviews." The World According to Garp by John Irving was thrown across the room, where upon considering reactions I have received since, there resulted a splot. Enter God. He will take up when we left off with Mrs. Prendergast.

GOD: What do we have here? The World According to Garp? Sounds like a take off on one of my boys. What's it doing all over the wall?

ME: Well, in some circles it's up in lights, you know. The No. 1 book chuice of the year in many.

GOD: So much for freedom of choice.

ME: Have a sense of humor for heaven's sake. Garp did. Well, what did You think of it?

GOD: It's what I think about the world that Garp saw that matters. It wasn't funny.

ME: He seemed to see corruption, lust, intemperance – all the Capital Sins and not a heck of a lot of virtue.

GOD: That's what I've been saying for years. Why doesn't anybody listen to Me anymore? Maybe it's time for another plague.

ME: Kind of depressing isn't it. Floods, plagues. Wipe 'em out start over?.

GOD: Can you think of a better way?

ME: Garp rose above it, as best he could anyway, despite insurmountable odds. AND, he maintained his sense of humor throughout some very outrageous situations.

GOD: You really have a sense of humor fixation, don't you? Yes, Garp is another Job. About all he missed along the way was leprosy. But, after all, Garp brought it all upon himself. He caused his own corruption.

ME: But just think about the circumstances of his conception alone – what chance did he have?

GOD: I know all about unusual circumstances of conception.

ME: And what about all the violence in his life?

GOD: I know about that too.

ME: You didn't like it.

GOD: I think it smells like your orange.

ME: What is that supposed to mean?

GOD: Reality doesn't always smell its best splattered on the wall.

ME: You mean just gloss it over, pretend it isn't there?

GOD: No, but John Irving could have taken a few lessons from Alfred Hitchcock: If you're going to write about reality with all its lust and blood and violence – be subtle. Know what I mean? People can be shocked by implication. They don't have to have everything spelled out.

ME: What about the redition of the slaying of the innocents? What about the Passion and Death? Those are your Gospels.

GOD: Maybe a bit overdone. Divine Inspiration is never 100%. There's always the human factor. Enough from Me. Did you like it?

ME: Excuse me, I think I smell an orange.

Tennis team takes sixth

The Charlevoix Rayder tennis team concluded the 1979 season in three-way tie for sixth place in State Class C competition at Schoolcraft College in Livonia last weekend.

University Liggett, Grosse Pointe, won the state title after taking all seven flights for total of 28 points; Detroit Country Day placed second with 20 points; Kalamazoo Hackett, third with 11 points; North Muskegon and Battle Creek-Springfield tied for fourth with eight points each and Charlevoix, Glen Lake and Ann Arbor-Green Hills tied for sixth with five each among the 15 teams entered in the tournament.

Speaking of the recent tournament, Coach Wright said "all in all, it was a successful weekend. While they could have done a little better, I felt they played well in the tournament."

In discussing the season, he said the season had been 'most enjoyable." He went on to say that with three new players, the team did very well and, and for the most part, had worked extremely hard.

He concluded by saying that he felt they had represented themselves and the school extremely well. "On the courts their behavior was exemplary. They had humility when they won and poise when they lost. I am proud of the kids," he added.

The results of tournament play follows:

Mark Lignell won the first game 6-0 but lost the next two 6-4, 7-6 with the last game going to the last point of the tie breaker for an excellent match, Coach Wright said. He lost to Toni Joseph of Saginaw St. Joseph.

The No. 1 doubles, Jeff Cockfield and John Grooters won the first round 6-0, 3-6, 6-0 over Country Day and lost the second round in three sets to the third seeded team in the state; No. 2 doubles, Geoff Nelson and Ed Engstrom, won their first round 6-0, 7-5 and lost their second 6-4, 7-5 to Country Day; the No. 3 doubles, Rick Rajewski and Jim Fowler went to the semi-finals before losing to Country Day 6-1, 6-4. They had won their first round 6-4, 6-0 and their second 6-0, 6-2.

Seniors on the squad are Lignell, Dave Morgridge, Cockfield, Nelson, Engstrom, Fowler and Lynne DeMoor.

Eerie sounds, rhythmic vibrations and synthesizers are some of the things studied by DIANE PLUISTER of Boyne City to create electronic music compositions in Alma College's four-week Electronic Music course during spring term.

During spring term, students take only one course. This allows them to concentrate on one subject and to develop that subject more extensively than is possible during the regular terms.

The main purpose of the course, taught by Dr. Paul Russell, is to create an electronic composition on the synthesizer. To be able to take the course, the nine students involved in the class had to have some music listening training.

Day Camp program starts July 9

Jack Gebott is in charge of the Day Camp program at Mt. McSauba run by the City of Charlevoix. This week he tells the Courier about the program.

COURIER: Is the camp open to all children?

GEBOTT: It's open to all Charlevoix area children, as well as children of summer residents, ages five to 12.

COURIER: When will the camp start?

GEBOTT: July 9, and it will run for six weeks.

COURIER: Is it an all-day Camp?

GEBOTT: The hours are nine to 3:30 Monday through Friday, and this year, for the first time, we will camp out over night on Thursdays.

COURIER: What does the camp cost?

GEBOTT: This year, it will be $20 a week. That's up $5 from last year, but each kid will get a T-shirt with the camp logo on it, and the extra money will help buy the food on Thursday nights.

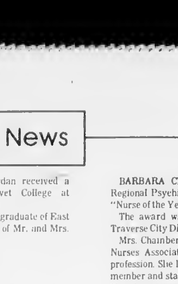
COURIER: What types of activities do you include in your program?

GEBOTT: We have swimming instruction and free swim, archery, nature studies, arts and crafts, camp crafts (camping, cooking, woodcutting, etc.) BB gunnery, games, hiking, singing, skits and stunts, all the things that are usually offered in a camp like ours. We have received a donation from the Knights of Columbus and are hoping to expand our waterfront program to canoeing.

COURIER: What kind of camp area do you have at Mt. McSauba?

GEBOTT: We have 50 acres of rolling and steep hills, sandy valleys, deep woods, swamps, dunes, and 3,500 feet of Lake Michigan frontage. It's an ideal facility. We feel there is a need for those children not ready for a resident camp, and Camp McSauba fills that need.

Meet Charlevoix



Jack Gebott

COURIER: How many children do you expect to have?

GEBOTT: Probably about 35 a week. Last year we had a 36 percent increase over the previous year, and we expect an increase this year.

COURIER: Do you have any special events during the camping periods?

GEBOTT: Yes, each week we make special awards in the various program areas.

COURIER: Do the children have to sign up for the entire six weeks?

GEBOTT: No, they can sign up for as many weeks as they want, but there is a reduction in fees for those who sign up for the entire six weeks.

COURIER: How do parents sign their children up for the camping program?

GEBOTT: They can call the City Recreation Director at 547-4272.

COURIER: You are the chief counselor. How many assistants do you have?

GEBOTT: Our staff is being selected now. We will have four or five well qualified young people.

COURIER: What are your qualifications as a camp director?

GEBOTT: I worked in residential and day camps run by the YMCA in Grand Rapids. I'm a certified YMCA aquatics instructor. When I started with this camp four years ago, I adapted my expertise to the area.

COURIER: What is your educational background?

GEBOTT: I was born and raised in Ludington, graduated from high school there, then served in the Navy. Later I went to Grand Rapids Junior College, from which I graduated, and to Western Michigan University, where I received a bachelor of arts degree. I taught in the Kalamazoo public schools, got a master's degree in history, and have almost completed enough hours for a specialist degree in secondary school administration. I've been an educator for over 12 years.

COURIER: What are your hobbies?

GEBOTT: Hunting and geneology.

COURIER: Do you have a family?

Arabian colt is prize in contest

Some lucky 4-H member will win a registered Arabian colt this summer in a new contest sponsored by Tusco and Abee Heath, owners of HK Arabians, near Bay Shore.

The Heaths, along with the Charlevoix County 4-H Youth Program, are conducting a Horse Essay Contest for 4-H members in Charlevoix and Emmet Counties. Youngsters must be 9-19 years old, and they must be participants in a 4-H project. Participants need not be enrolled in a 4-H horse club - participation in any 4-H project will qualify them for the contest. Non-members may become 4-H members by calling their County Extension Office.

Participants will be required to write an essay of not more than 20 pages on how they would care for their horse. They will be expected to cover subjects such as feeding, medical attention, facilities needed, training techniques, and estimated costs. Contestants are encouraged to do research and interview horse breeders to gain better knowledge, and to help them in obtaining information for their essay.

Each essay must be accompanied by an entry form with a parents signature. Essay notebooks must be turned in to the Charlevoix County Extension Office by Aug. 3, 1979. The winner will be announced on Friday, Aug. 24, at the Emmet County Fair 4-H Horse Show. Entry forms and contest rules may be obtained by calling the Petoskey Extension Office, at 347-2596, or the Boyne City Extension Office, at 582-6232.

Pictured is Dr. Harry Custer, Grand Knight, presenting a check to Jack Gebott, camp director. The funds will be used to enlarge the waterfront program.

Tom Townsend of the Weather Service Forecast Office in Ann Arbor presented Wagner with an emblem "in recognition of your valuable contribution to the climatological records for your community."

Wagner is head of the Department of Natural Resources office on Beaver Island and serves as weather observer on a voluntary basis.

There are approximately 12,000 weather observing stations in the United States, 300 of them in Michigan. The data they provide is described as "the back bone of all climatological reports which are used by thousands of people daily."

Bernard 'Bill' Wagner was honored by National Weather Service Forecast Office for 15 years of service.

Barrett to talk on workers comp

"We are extremely pleased to hear that worker's compensation is Gov. Milliken's number one economic-legislative priority in 1979," the president of the Michigan State Chamber said today.

James Barrett, chief executive officer of the 5,800-member State Chamber will make a presentation on behalf of the Business/Industry Compensation Reform Coalition on June 7. This presentation is scheduled for 12 noon at the Weathervane Restaurant.

Reform of the Workers' Disability Compensation System in Michigan is essential in order to rid the system of its many wastes and abuses and to make sure that the state's legitimately-injured workers receive adequate care and benefits, Barrett says.

Barrett adds that the State Chamber has long advocated changes in the system, "which includes an ineffective statute of limitations, broad definitions of work and non-work related disabilities and payment of benefits to retirees."

According to Barrett, "these abuses have led to increasing costs for employers, who pay the entire $1 billion expense each year. The State Chamber is pleased that the Governor also cited these costly abuses among his targets for reform.

To make your luncheon reservations please call the Charlevoix Chamber of Commerce at 547-2101.

Davis favors crime act

WASHINGTON, OC -- Congressman Bob Davis (R-Mich.) has co-sponsored legislation that would crack down on criminals guilty of certain violent crimes.

"Even in a traditionally peaceful area like Northern Michigan, violent crime is on the uprise," Davis said. "We must move quickly to reverse this trend and keep our communities safe."

The Domestic Crime Control and Prevention Act would set a mandatory two-year minimum sentence for criminals convicted of second degree murder, robbery, assault and crimes involving a handgun ur other dangerous weapons. A second violation would be punishable by a four-year minimum sentence.

The bill is an attempt to battle rising crime rates in the United States. Davis said, citing figures that show violent crime was up 4 percent last year.

While most sentences would be mandatory, the bill would allow judges to impose lesser punishments if the criminal were under 18 years old, mentally incompetent, acting under pressure or not the principal offender.

Youth program offered

A Summer Youth Employment Program is again being sponsored by the Traverse Bay Area Intermediate School District. This is funded by a CETA grant through Northwest Michigan Manpower Consortium. In order to be enrolled in this program the youth must be 14 through 21 years of age and be a member of a family who fits certain economic guidelines established by the federal government.

The youth are assigned to work in local public non profit organizations. These include such varied sites as health care facilities, villages, townships, recreation programs, schools, law enforcement installations as well as most county offices.

The youth will be employed for eight weeks and the starting date is June 25th. The program will employ over 700 youth this summer.

If you are interested in more information about the program you should call Michelle Miller at this phone number, 547-9947 or write to Michelle Miller at P.O. Box 312, Charlevoix, 49720.

Wedding

Fairchild-VanLoo

Oebra Fairchild and Darrel VanLoo of Charlevoix were married Sunday, May 27 at Castle Farms.

The wedding ceremony was performed by Rev. Walter Hastings.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Fairchild of Alpena. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Roxy VanLoo.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride chose a gown of white knit jersey for her wedding. Fashioned with an empire bodice worn with a cummerbund, the gown featured a Princess Anne neckline accented with re-embroidered lace and seed pearls, long tapered sleeves with lace accents and an A-line skirt that terminated in a chapel length train bordered with a wide lace band. White silk forget-me-nots encircled the teardrop arrangement of white silk gardenias with touches of pink to compliment the floral theme of pink, white and lavendar in her bridal bouquet.

Irene Andrzejewski of Petoskey was maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Darla and Dawn Faircluld, sisters of the bride. They wore identical mauve pink gowns styled with empire waists, spaghetti straps and full skirts worn with elbow length ruffled capes.

Darrin VanLoo was best man. Brian and Roxy VanLoo were groomsmen. All are brothers of the bridegroom. Nick Anderson and John Crinnion were ushers.

A reception, hosted by the bride's parents, followed at Castle Farms.

After a wedding trip to the Upper Peninsula, the couple will return to live in Charlevoix.

The bride is employed at Leutheuser's and the bridegroom is employed at the Lexalite Corp.

Real Estate Is A People Business And Ski & Shore Wants You To Know Its People

Meet Roy Elsworth

Roy Elsworth, born in East Jordan and raised in northern lower Michigan, is well suited for his position as the full time, year 'round Ski and Shore sales consultant on Beaver Island. "I was raised on a farm and developed a great love for the out-of-doors," he explains. Besides having interests in fishing, hunting and other out door sports; Elsworth is actively concerned with conservation and once held a position as a park ranger. He graduated from Michigan State University where he was awarded a B.S. degree in Agriculture Mechanization. He is knowledgeable of timbering and forestry and administered the contract for Beaver Island Timber Co.

"Beaver Island is off the tourist path and is more of a mecca for sailors, pilots and wilderness lovers," says Elsworth. He is pictured above with his Lake Amphibian, a four passenger sea plane. Elsworth has over 700 hours flying time logged and has piloted the Beaver Island Township owned plane for ambulance service. He has been flying aircraft for ten years, but purchased the amphibian recently to aid his real estate profession.

Prior to receiving his real estate license, Elsworth managed a large private club in the Upper Peninsula. His responsibilities included the supervision of timbering, wildlife management and directing the sale of lots in subdivisions. Elsworth's professional aspiration is to attain a Broker's license. His immediate personal goal is to acquire an Instrument Rating.

Voters approve six mills, elect Elaine Martin to board

By better than a 2 to 1 margin, voters in the Charlevoix School District Monday approved the renewal of six mills for operation of the schools.

And by an even bigger margin, voters elected Elaine Martin to a three year term on the board of eduaction. Incumbent Charles Elzinga ran unopposed for a four year term.

Voters approved the six mill renewal for one year by 256 votes, 457-201. There were five spoiled ballots.

Because an "austere" budget and declining enrollment are predicted for the 1979-80 school year, Superintendent Gordon VanWieren has announced that cutbacks in the teaching staff will be made. VanWieren said 1½ to 2½ positions at the high school will be cut while 1 position at the middle school will be dropped.

It is estimated that the six mills will generate approximately $67,000 in additional funds.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Martin was the overwhelming choice of the voters for the three year board of education position. She outdistanced Dennis Kusina by 305 votes, 471-166.

Mrs. Martin will actually replace James Haggard on the board. Haggard was elected to a four year term a year ago. But earlier this year he resigned because of business reasons. Clem Wagner was appointed as Haggard's temporary replacement until Monday's election.

Charles Elzinga accumulated 556 votes running uncontested for a four year term.

Altogether, 663 residents in the school district voted, which is slightly less than 15 percent.

In the race for the two vacancies on the Char-Em Intermediate Board of Education, voters elected James D'Brien and Ken Morin.

D'Brien was the top vote getter with 328 votes. Morin was second with 253, Dpal Goldsmith was third with 247 and Dick Dubin was fourth with 207. D'Brien and Morin will replace Dubin and Judy Juilleret.

$3,045,263 earmarked for 62 unit senior, handicapped housing

The Charlevoix Housing Commission was informed Friday by U.S. Sen. Donald W. Riegle, Jr. that funds have been approved by HUD in Grand Rapids for a Public Housing project in the City of Charlevoix. Sen. Riegle stated that $3,045,263 would be earmarked to build 62 units for seniors and handicapped persons.

The Charlevoix Housing Commission was formed December 1974 for the purpose of obtaining elderly housing for the City of Charlevoix. And it has been pursuing that goal ever since. The project will be owned and operated by the Charlevoix Housing Commission.

The present members of the commission are: Robert J. Cook, Marge Dinwiddie, Ralph Hamilton, Ralph McRae and Ralph Shapton. The Charlevoix Housing Commission meets twice a month, on the first and third Wednesdays at 4 p.m. in the city hall.

City band rehearsals start June 19

The Charlevoix City Band will begin rehearsals on Tuesday, June 19 in preparation for the 1979 concert season.

The concert season, which features weekly concerts in East Park, will begin Thursday, July 5 and continue through mid-August. The concerts are presented on the band stage at 8 p.m. every Thursday.

Rehearsals are held at the Charlevoix High School band room at 7:30 p.m. every Tuesday.

Instrumentalists in the area are invited to play with the band. For more information call 547-2882 or 547-2074.

The band will be under the direction of Steven Kroll and Gail Hallead. Kroll is a 1964 graduate of Charlevoix High School. He recently received his B.M.E. degree from North Texas State. Miss Hallead, a recent graduate of Central Michigan, assisted Gary Stutzman this spring with the marching band. She also has taught private lessons in the area.

The Charlevoix City Band has performed summer concerts in Charlevoix for over a half a century and is one of the few remaining bands in the state who play without compensation.

Family racing encouraged by Yacht Club

By Tom Dammann

Family racing is being encouraged this summer by officers of the Charlevoix Yacht Club, according to Commodore Bill Kenifeck.

"Not just for the Wednesday night summer cruising fleet series, but especially for the cruise races to Northport, Horton Bay, Leland and the Red Fox Regatta," Kenifeck amplified.

This year the club is using the Bermuda Start, he added. Under this system if a boat has a 3 hour handicap it starts 3 hours ahead of the scratch boat (the boat with no handicap). Put simply, this means the slower boats start first and the faster boats start later, each according to its handicap.

"It's fun," Kenifeck said. "The finishes are very exciting with lots of boats bunching up at the line."

Dr. as another sailor put it, "you spend more time watching the guys in front you want to catch and pass and less time looking over your shoulder at the guys behind."

Kenifeck also explained that boats don't have to enter the longer cruise races if their skippers don't care to.

"They can just sail along with us and join us in the parties and fun at our destination," he said.

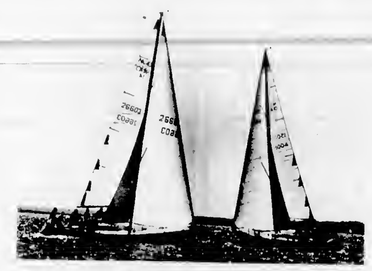
Power boats are invited to put-put along for the fun, too, he added.

There have been two cruise races thus far this season. The first was the spring tune up cruise race to Boyne City and back on Memorial Day weekend.

The last, the overnight on Lake Charlevoix was held June 2 and was largely a drifting match with an hour long interlude at 2 a.m. when a 30 to 40 knot wind squall hit the lake.

Overall winner was Helcyon a Santana 20, skippered by Jamie Duke with a crew of high school friends. Josh Barnes on his Santana 525, Basic Transportation, was second. Another Santana 525, Mud Duck, skippered by Jerry Leonard, placed third.

Winners of the three divisions sailing under the performance handicap RP were: Division A: 1st, Helcyon; second, Blasen III, a Pierson 26, skippered by Karl L. Jurries; third, White Lightnin', a Morgan 27, Skipper Terry Edger; Division B: Basic Transportation, Mud Duck, and Sly, Dr. David Strawbridge; Division C: Traveller, a one ton skipper, David Irish, Mint Julep, skipper Jack Begrow; and Peregrine, skipper Dr. Wilmer C. Glenny.



Ten Santana 525's comprise the Charlevoix fleet of these new fast 25 foot racing cruisers, which has been designated the nation's Fleet No. 1.

This summer the Charlevoix Yacht Club will host the First Eastern Regional Championships August 12-13, which is open to any Santana 525 east of the Mississippi, according to Kenifeck.

Another important gathering will be the 1979 Barthel Trophy Championship and Second Annual North American 40 Championship, July 27-29, a three race series held in Lake Michigan and Lake Charlevoix (if weather conditions prevent racing in the big lake).

Sponsored by the Yacht Racing Union of the Great Lakes, the North American offshore one-design association and the Charlevoix Yacht Club, this is the second time these races have been held here and is expected to be an annual event.

The Barthel Trophy Championship includes either the Chicago or Port Huron to Mackinac Race and the three race series here.

The National North American Forty Championship is composed of the final three race series only.

A new 40 foot cruising sloop, the North American 40's made their racing debuts in last summer's Mackinac races and the first championships held here.

The weekly summer cruising fleet and the Santana 525 race series held every Wednesday evening started May 30 and will terminate Aug. 29.

The balance of this summer's yacht club schedule follows:

June 16: Cruise Race to Northport (NORC) Race T.C. to Leland).

June 23: CYC Square Race – approximately 132 miles.

Sailing lessons to start June 18

The Charlevoix Yacht Club's basic sailing lessons will start June 18. There will be three lessons all within a week.

Lessons will be from 6 p.m. until 8 p.m. on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday. Each Monday session will be a "dry land" session. Tuesdays and Thursdays will be spent on the water in the sailboats. The cost for the three sessions is $6. One weekly session is set-up to acquaint the newcomer with the fundamentals of rigging and sailboat handling.

Enrollment for each weekly session is limited. The number of weekly sessions will depend on demand. Enrollment is open to everyone 12 years of age and older, including non-Charlevoix Yacht Club members. Juniors between the ages of 12 and 17 must have signed parent permission and must have a certified swimming certificate. Enrollment will not be taken during the Monday night session.

LaLeche League to start series on breastfeeding

The Charlevoix La Leche League will be starting a new series of meetings Tuesday, June 19 at the home of Dawn Fletcher, 110 W. Hurlbut in Charlevoix at 7:30 p.m.

The series ul four meetings cover a variety of topics including the advantages of breastfeeding to mother and baby, the art of breastfeeding and overcoming difficulties, the family and the breast fed baby, weaning and nutrition.

The meetings will be led by the new group leader, Mary Morehead. Mary resides in Ellsworth with her husband, Chuck, and their daughter, Christy.

The meetings are an informal discussion and are valuable for the pregnant woman who is concerned about learning as much as possible about nursing before her baby is born. Many mothers attend meetings after the baby is born for the information and support it provides. Mothers with nursing babies are encouraged to bring them to meetings.

For more information about meetings of breastfeeding or if you would like to purchase a copy of the "Womanly Art of Breastfeeding", contact Mary Morehead, 588-6037 or Jenny Bellairs, 547-6255.

County 4-H plans workshop at Grandvue June 15

Charlevoix County 4-H members and volunteer leaders will be very busy this month, with many projects they wish to share with the community.

On Friday, June 15, Marlene Caszatt, extension home economist, will present a workshop at the Grandvue Medical Care Facility. The program, beginning at 2 p.m. will show participants how to make simple items, such as lap robes, bibs and wheel chair saddle bags, for the patients at Grandvue. These items would make excellent 4-H sewing projects for children, and they would also be easy, but helpful, projects for adult service groups. The public is invited to attend this workshop.

Another 4-H event at Grandvue will take place on Tuesday, July 10. This will be an animal show. Children are invited to bring their animals (dogs, cats, birds, chickens, rabbits, ducks, lambs, goats, or other small pets) to Grandvue. There they will talk with the patients and receive ribbons which the patients will make. Anyone interested is invited to call the cooperative extension to attend this workshop.

Five older 4-H members and three 4-H leaders will be traveling to Michigan State University June 20-23 to participate in 4-H Exploration Days. While on campus, the participants will live in the college dormitories and take classes taught by University specialists. 4-H members attending are Ann Balch, Laura Beauvis, Jerry Sulak of East Jordan and Michiko Regier, Yasunori Tanikaua of Charlevoix. Leaders attending are Nancy Brooks, Claudia Grutsch and Debbie Peck from East Jordan.

Younger 4-H members 6-8 years old will have their own Day Camp on Tuesday, June 26 at Whiting Park. The program which runs from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. will include classes in crafts, foods and bicycle safety, plus a nature hike and games. This camp is open to all children 6-8 years old who become registered as 4-H members for a summer project. The cost is $1 per child.

Fund raising activities are also evident this summer. 4-H members are taking individual pledges for their 24 hour Rock-A-Thon, which will begin at 6 p.m. Friday June 15, at the Peninsula Grange Hall.

4-H'ers are also selling raffle tickets at 25 cents each for a Murray 12 speed bicycle. The bike is from Boyne City Ace Hardware. The winner will be drawn on July 4, in Boyne City and tickets may be obtained from any 4-H member.

Area Youngsters are advised by Bob Bellairs, 4-H program assistant that children who wish to display crafts, foods, animals or other projects at the Emmet County Fair in August must be registered for that project in the Cooperative Extension Service Office in Emmet or Charlevoix counties. There are no dues to pay or uniforms to buy. All that is required is your name and project on a 4-H enrollment form.

This will not only assure you a place in the Emmet County Fair but it will also make you eligible for 4-H Camps and Workshops, and entitle you to 4-H books to help you with your projects. Charlevoix County residents call 582-6232, and Emmet County Residents call 347-2596.

Sherryl Bergmann and Linda Dewey win nursing scholarships

Charlevoix Area Hospital announced the winners of two nursing scholarships this week.

Sherryl Bergmann of Charlevoix is this year's recipient of the Peggy Carey Northway Scholarship and Linda Dewey of Eastport is the winner of the Charlevoix Area Hospital Nursing Scholarship sponsored by Mrs. D.D. Walker.

The two winners were presented their scholarship checks at the hospital. Dr. Robert Martin presented Ms. Bergmann with a check for $200. Ms. Bergmann is eligible to receive $200 for each year she attends nursing school, to a maximum of $800.

Ms. Dewey received a $700 check presented by Dr. Gilbert Saltonstall, which is a one time scholarship award toward her tuition for nursing school.

Both students plan to enter Grand Rapids Butterworth Hospital's 3-year nursing program. They both indicate, as well, they plan to continue studies toward Bachelors of Science degrees after receiving their nursing diplomas.

Ms. Bergmann, who graduates this year from Charlevoix High School, says she is considering a career as a nurse practitioner. But, she adds, she has also considered specializing in obstetrical nursing. A career as a nurse practitioner appeals, she says, because of the responsibility that nurse practitioners are given.

She explains that in addition to traditional nursing duties, nurse practitioners assist doctors by conducting some examinations and in some instances make house calls. Ms. Bergmann, daughter of Bruce and Susan Bergmann, has worked as a nurses aide at Charlevoix Area Hospital for 1½ years.

The Peggy Carey Northway Scholarship, of which Ms. Bergmann is the second recipient, was established in memory of Peggy Carey Northway of Charlevoix who died of leukemia while a nursing student. Ms. Bergmann was selected as this year's winner by a committee consisting of Charlevoix Area Hospital director of nursing, chief of medical staff and hospital administrator.

The Charlevoix Area Hospital Nursing Scholarship, also called The Walker Scholarship, was established in 1968 by the late D.D. Walker and Mrs. Walker of Charlevoix. A committee from the Charlevoix Area Hospital Board of Directors selected the scholarship winner.

Ms. Dewey, who graduates from Central Lake High School this June, says she is entering general nursing until she has completed further studies, after which she may select a nursing specialty.

She reports her interest in a nursing career has in part stemmed from her work as an attendant on the Torch Bay Ambulance crew, and from a recent experience helping a family friend through the final stages of a terminal illness.

Ms. Dewey is the daughter of Eugene and Esther Dewey of Eastport.

Betty Inman receives Fassett Award

Betty Inman of Charlevoix received the 3rd Annual R. Dale Fassett Memorial Award at a luncheon held on Friday, at the Weathervane Inn in Charlevoix. The affair was sponsored by the Charlevoix-Emmet Interintermediate Education Association.

The award is presented annually in recognition of outstanding contributions to handicapped children. R. Dale Fassett was the former Director of Special Education for the Char-Em Intermediate School District. Fassett died of pulmonary embolism in February of 1974 at the age of 37. His devotion to provide appropriate, quality programs to handicapped youngsters has prompted the presentation of the award.

After evaluating many nominations, Ms. Inman was selected from a field of 16. She is an educational facilitator for the Char-Em Intermediate School District.

Ms. Inman has been described by the nominators as "doing a great job, being versatile and lovable to the mentally impaired students she works with, giving many hours above and beyond in the interest of her kids, promoting opportunities for employment skills" as just a few of the reasons Mr. Inman was chosen by her peers.

Ms. Inman has been employed by the Char-Em district for 12½ years. The award was presented by Gail Wiemer, Fassett Award Committee member. Recent winners have been Ms. Lillian Bergmann (1977) and Mr. James Bellmer (1978).

Opinion

Our Opinion

Nuclear power still viable but....

Petoskey City Manager Richard Gorman couldn't be more on target with his concern about the rising cost and decreasing supply of municipal power sources.

They're the same concerns that face Charlevoix and dozens of other communities across the state. How are cities going to meet their future electrical needs and how much can cities afford?

During an address made last week, Gorman discussed how Petoskey is wrestling with a study on the best methods to meet city electrical needs of the future.

The firm making Petoskey's study has recommended that the city purchase into two nuclear and two coal power plants owned by Consumers Power Company and Detroit Edison.

Gorman said the firm recommended the city, through an affiliation with other municipalities, invest in these power plants to meet future energy needs. The consulting firm felt this was the least expensive direction for the city over the next 15 or 20 years.

Problems with this purchase have been brought out by persons who are opposed to investing city funds in nuclear plants through bonds because of the risks involved with nuclear power.

Gurnian said investing in nuclear facilities would offer the cheapest rate while staying a wholesale customer of Consumers without investigating would provide the most expensive rate. But the delays and questions about nuclear power also present a risk of his city's investment, he said.

Gorman feels nuclear power still offers a viable answer to meet part of the city's needs. He also believes the U.S. must reduce its oil imports.

We agree with Gorman that nuclear power still is a partial solution to our energy needs, despite recent questions raised by the Three-Mile Island incident.

However, we raise that support with some reservations and caution. Safety design features of plants must still be looked upon with close scrotiny, as well as attention being given to spent fuel storage.

We cannot afford to be without alternative energy sources and we're not ready to throw the towel in on nuclear power.

As Charlevoix city fathers continue to mull over our future energy needs, they might look at Gorman's viewpoint. We think it's a good one.

Central Lake makes contribution

Editor:

I think the city of Charlevoix owes Central Lake and Brownwood a big "Thank You" for their contribution to the Centennial Parade. If it weren't for them the parade was nothing more than just any other (man) parade.

My hat is off to Central Lake. That's one town that is going places.

A disappointed Parade goer. P.S. The Charlevoix Band did a great job, as usual.

Workers deserve credit

To the Editor:

The following people were kind enough to donate several hours of their time on a sunny Saturday morning in order to rid Michigan Beach park of a layer of trash and broken glass:

Jim and Kathy Brinker, Bill Purdy, Jim Mitchell, Ray and Jean Giffin, Mary Biddick, Maxine Bergmann, Marguerite Currie, June Cross, Rachael Myers and Erin McGarry.

These workers and many other Charlevoix residents trust that the City will follow through with it's commitment to properly maintain this beautiful park.

Sincerely
James L. McGarry

Is life better?

The other day, a good friend and I fell to talking about the changes that has taken place in our lifetimes and whether life in general today is better than it was in the so-called "good old days."

My friend, who is about a third-again older than I am, is well satisfied with the progress made in the last 75 years. He is a tinkerer by nature and would have been extremely unhappy if fate and allowed him to be born before the ero of the power lawn mower and the motorized garden cultivator.

I, on the other hand, am not a tinkerer. I use the gadgets that society thrusts upon me until they break down. Then I am forced to throw them out because I don't know how to fix them, and I certainly can't afford to pay to have them fixed.

This leaves me with rather grey-brown feelings about the 20th Century. I experience twinges of envy when I meet others who find the chaos we have created either exciting or challenging.

For I think you'll have to agree that aside from a handful of advances in the medical arts and in the fields of social justice and race relations, the 20th Century has done very little to improve the quality of life in America.

The automobile probably is the most visible contribution the 1900s has made to our style of living. Yet I defy anyone to cite chapter and verse as to how the automobile has added one jot to human happiness.

The automobile is one of the greatest killers of the young; the automobile through its noxious exhausts has defiled the very air we breathe; the automobile bears primary responsibility for urban sprawl and the destruction of pristine wilderness; the automobile – for all its potential three quarters of a century ago – has become a demanding, petulant mistress who makes exhorbitant demands on both public and private treasuries.

But the automobile is only one of the gimmicks that the 20th Century has created in the name of progress. Every home is filled with a wide variety of electrical appliances to perform chores which formerly were done manually. Washers, dryers, vacuum sweepers, mix-masters, refrigerators, dish washers, microwave ovens: All of them have been designed to free inlady from the onerous chores involved with keeping a house.

A generation ago, we didn't have su many gadgets. But every family of middle income and up did have day help. A working man in those days not only provided for his own family, but one or two other families besides. Furtherniure, the housework got done and the food got cooked without using a single amp of electrical power.

Worse, the 20th Century has turned os into a people totally dependent upon a host of chemicals and radioactive materials, the effects of which are still largely unknown. When was the last time you read about a tanker laden with a deadly chemical overturning on a highway or a railroad right-of-way, sending dozens of nearby residents scurrying for safety? It can't have been very long, because such accidents happen on a daily basis across the United States.

Furthermore, we have allowed chemical companies to pollote our drinking water, contaminate our fish, strike down our livestock and defile the soil we walk on.

Make no mistake: Living in the chemical age is a risky business at best.

If the 20th Century has made any strides at all, it is in the eradication of communicable diseases that once struck terror into the hearts of parents. Before Dr. Junas Salk developed his famous anti-polio vaccine in the 1950s, healthy, strong-limbed children could be killed – or reduced to life-long cripples – in a matter of hours. Pulio was a terrible cloud to live under.

Medical science also has extended the lifespan with its healing potients, its surgical skills and its expanding – but still infantile – knowledge of human nutrition.

Unfortunately, the medical community also has devised elaborate life-support systems which allow the victims of catastrophic strokes to survive for years with clouded minds and worthless bodies.

A mere generation ago, such gross inhumanity was mercifully beyond our reach.

Gas allocation answers

Since there has been much confusion generated by recent questions concerning the gasoline allocation system in Michigan during the current energy shortage, I thought I'd take a few lines and explain which outlets and businesses get how much gasoline and why.

The Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act of 1973 set up a program to take care of problems when supplies drop below suppliers' obligations. The allocation system is based on historical purchases. Two special rules now in effect set up partial controls governing sale and distribution of gasoline.

Heating oil and diesel fuel are generally exempt from the allocation program.

Under the program, individual retailers, distributors or wholesale purchasers are entitled to a volume of gasoline each month based on purchases during the corresponding month of a base period, November 1977 – October 1978.

If there is not enough gasoline to go around, suppliers will divvy up the fuel according to an "allocation fraction". For instance, if a company has enough gasoline to equal only 85% of its obligations, each customer would receive 85% of his purchase for the corresponding month of the base year volume.

There are, however, two types of priority users. One, category includes emergency vehicles, energy production firms, sanitation services, telecommunications services, passenger transportation services, aviation services, and cargo and mail trucks. Customers wanting gasoline in these fields will receive their total current requirements less the allocation fraction.

The second group of priority users includes agricultural users and the Department of Defense. Fuel for these two purposes will be supplied according to their requirements in every instance.

There will, of course, be inequities in the program. To even out some of the inequities caused by problems which may occur, say, if a customer purchased an unusually small amount of fuel during a particular month in the base year, the Act includes two provisions.

One, the customer has the option of using his average monthly purchase between October 1978 and February 1979 in place of the base period volume during any month when that average exceeds the base period volume by moro than 10 percent.

Two, if you feel your allocation is inadequate or have recently opened a business, you can apply for relief at the Department of Energy's Regional Office in Chicago.

The federal program, known as the State Set-Aside Program, gives the state the authority to redirect 3 percent of the available gasoline supply to individuals experiencing temporary hardship situations.

The powers for administering this program were given to the Energy Administration by the Governor in 1976.

If you wish to apply for temporary relief from the State Set-Aside Program, contact the Energy Emergency Center, Energy Administration, P.O. Box 30228, Lansing, MI 48909, or call (517) 373-8250.

You can also contact the Federal Department of Energy's regional office by writing Department of Energy, Region V, 175 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago, IL 60604, or by calling (312) 353-8570.

Both offices are open from 9 a.m. to 12 noon and 1-4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

The rights of mothers

A mother wrote me the other day questioning the property rights of mothers. (Who has custody of the ice cubes, transparent tape and the piece of chicken tape and the niece of chicken in the condensed chicken soup.)

"Within minutes last weekend," she wrote, "I found my 15-year-old had taken my mascara to Michigan with him to keep his blond mustache noticeable... my 11-year-old had scrubbed the grass stains off his gym shoes with my toothbrush... and my four-year-old had taken my magic magic marker and made hex signs all over my heirloom bedspread. Do mothers have any rights at all?

It all depends. Do you remember signing anything in the delivery room? Some women sign the MATERNAL VOW OF POVERTY while still heavily sedated. I don't remember signing it at all but when I awoke the kids had rights to the fillings in my teeth.

Would it shock you to know I have not found my comb in 15 years and comb my hair by running my fingers through it? Or that everyone has worn my white sweater except the dog? (And only because he looks lousy in white.)

At this point I am trying to outlaw the MATERNAL VOW OF POVERTY by introducing a Mother's Bill of Rights.

Visitation rights to the kitchen would be limited only to those either cleaning it or cooking in it. A mother would be able to "put by" a small, cold pork chop or a half bottle of cola without planting mines around it.

Persons lifting pencils, paper clips, rubber bands, typewriter ribbons, yardsticks, scissors, hairbrushes and other personal effects of mother would be prosecuted for trespassing.

Daughters pilfering soiled panty hose would be detained, questioned, given defense and a trial.

Daughters pilfering clean pantyhnse would be shot on the spot.

Husbands returning your car with an empty gas tank are obliged to pruvide you a rental car and to try harder.

Birthday checks shall not be used to pay the phone bill and school lunches.

Wigs will not be "borrowed" fur Trick-or-Treat and left tn moult in an old shopping bag.

And finally, mother will have one suitcase designated for her alone. She may need it.

Nothing to do? Read on

The following editorial was clipped out of a Chicago newspaper by a Courier subscriber and mailed to us. We reprint it as a guest column.

Three teenage boys, products not of the slums but of a very good eastern suburb of Cleveland have been found guilty of 11 burglaries. Why did they commit them? They had "nothing to do."

This case inspires us to present a message we have been saving for just such an occasion. The words were delivered by a juvenile court judge – one who speaks to young people every day. This is his message:

"Always we hear the plaintive cry of the teenager: "What can we do? Where can we go!' The answer is clear: 'Go home.' Hang the storm windows, paint the woodwork, rake the leaves, mow the lawn, wash the car, learn to cook, scrub the floors, repair the sink, build a boat, get a job. Help the Red Cross, the Salvation Army. Visit the sick, assist the poor, study your lessons, and, when you're through and not too tired, read a book.

Your parents do not owe you entertainment. Your community does not owe you recreational facilities. The world does not owe you a living. You owe the world your time and your energy and talents so that no one will be at war, in poverty, or sick, or lonely, again.

In plain simple words: Grow up! Quit being a crybaby. Get out of your dream world and develop a backbone, not a wishbone. Start acting like a man or woman.

You're supposed to be mature enough to accept some responsibility your parents have carried for years. They have nursed, protected, helped, appealed, begged, excused, tolerated and denied-themselves needed comfort so that you could have every benefit. You have NO RIGHT TO EXPECT them to bow to your every whim and fancy.

In heaven's name, grow up and go home!"

White Elephant Sale-Auction to raise money for Half Way Home

By Peg Ohle

There's going to be a White Elephant Sale and Auction on Saturday, June 30, to raise money for a worthy organization.

The organization is Half Way Home in Petoskey, a haven and training center for men recovering from alcoholism.

Serving Charlevoix and other northern Michigan counties, Half Way House is just what its name implies – a homelike residence staffed 24 hours a day for those who need help in recovering from what is now acknowledged to be a curable disease.

Those who enter Half Way Home are referred by alcohol abuse systems, hospitals, the courts, Alcoholics Anonymous, and others. After a thorough medical examination and evaluation of intake information, each man is started on an individual treatment program.

Half Way Home works with families, the courts, creditors, and any other pressure sources affecting the patient, who is usually worried and depressed.

Through one-to-one counseling sessions three times a week and group sessions two times a day, plus use of the Alcoholics Anonymous treatment plan, the men are gradually brought to the point where they can again face "outside" living. Sometimes it takes only six to eight weeks, others may be there a year, which is the maxunum period of time permitted.

According to Robert Eager, administrator and program director at Half Way Home, about 85 percent are ready to go back to work or school after six weeks. Perhaps some of those who are working find it difficult to get along without some supervision. For them there is the "Three-Quarters Way Home", which provides a non-drinking environment for an additional period of time.

From Jan. 1 to May 14, Half Way Home provided services to 47 men, about half of them from Charlevoix and Emmet counties. Half Way Home proper has room for 12 residents and the "Three Quarters Way Home" has room for six more. The only other similar facilities in northern Michigan are in Traverse City and Alpena.

Half Way Home follows up on its patients after release. After successfully completing the program, they enter into an "exit contract" which specifies they will continue receiving help either locally or wherever they move.

The average age of those treated at Half Way Home is about 37, Eager says, from 18 to 69, "and the trend is toward a younger age."

Half Way Home is financed about 30 percent by Substance Abuse Services (a governmental unit); about one percent by the United Way; a large percent by the Department of Social Services, which pays for the residents' room and board; and by local contributions. If a patient is financially able to pay all ur part of his expenses, he is asked to do so, but nobody is turned down because he lacks money.

Half Way Home receives $9.78 a day fur room and board of each resident, but it costs about $18 a day to cover these expenses.

Leslie Cunningham of Charlevoix, a Half Way Home board member, explains that their upcoming White Elephant Sale is an attempt to raise money for general operating expenses. The home has seven employees, including two counselors whose salaries have been paid by the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA). However, those funds will soon be terminated.

"Our new board has focused on fund-raising, but it is hard to raise money for Half Way Home because of the stigma the public places on alcoholism," Mrs. Cunningham said.

"People should know we take a professional approach to the treatment of alcoholism, and it works. It is grounded in Alcoholic Anonymous philosophy. Half Way Home is a home, not an institution. Fellowship and sharing make the program. Many of our staff members are recovering alcoholics."

Board members of the non-profit corporation, besides Mrs. Cunninghan, are Jennifer Brindel, Bill Parsons, and Joanne Haas, all of Charlevoix County; and Robert Kaiser, Robert Brown, Holly Girardin, Gary Cusek, Sally Davies, George Hudson, Gary Beck, and Father Medard Buvala of Emmet County.

Half Way Home is located at 704 Emmet Street, Petoskey. It has been in operation since 1974, when a group of local people got together to form the corporation. The public is invited to stop in and visit the facility any time. "The coffee pot is always on", Mrs. Cunningham said.

In the meantime, anyone having useful items to donate to the White Elepant Sale may call 547-2400 or 547-2145 for pickup.

Items will also be received at Half Way Home. All donations are tax-deductible.

Time and place of the sale: Saturday, June 30, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. at the Emmet County Fair Grounds.

"Our new board has focused on fund raising, but it is hard to raise money for Half Way Home because of the stigma the public places on alcoholism," says board member Leslie Cunningham (right). Robert Eager, administrator and program director is pictured at left

June Birthstone
Alexandrite

Alexandrite is a member of the Chrysoberyl family and a cousin to the beautiful cats eye. Because of Alexandrites recent discovery it does not have a long romantic history. But what the gem lacks in history it makes up in beauty and rarity. Fine stones appear green in daylight and raspberry red under artificial light. There is also a synthetic sapphire that has a similar color change and is often sold to tourists overseas as the genuine article.

Alexandrite was first discovered in 1831 in the Russian Urals on the day that Alexander II reached his majority and since red and green are the national colors of Russia the stone was named "Alexandrite."

Kroll and Gallagher to direct summer band

The summer band program offered by the Charlevoix Public Schools will begin Tuesday, June 19 and continue for six weeks, according to Gary Stutzman, band director.

Group classes as well as individual lessons will be given once weekly during the six week period. The lessons will be of one half hour duration between 7 a.m. and 4 p.m. Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

In making the announcement, Stutzman said the summer band program has played an important role in the development of the instrumental program in the Charlevoix schools. While attendance is on a voluntary basis, students from beginners on are encouraged to attend the classes.

There will be a fee of $15 for group lessons and $21 for individual lessons.

Instructors will be Steven Krull of Sanger, Tex., a graduate of North Texas State, who will teach brass and Mark Gallagher, a student at Oberlin College, who will teach woodwinds.

For further information call 547-2882 or 547-2074.

Tom Kaufmann and Bill Vogel

WVOY makes changes

Early morning listeners of WVOY will no longer hear Bill Vogel tell them "to get the heck out of bed."

After three and a half years with the radio station, including a year and a half as the morning man, Vogel has turned the microphone over to Tom Kaufmann and is now devoting his time and energy to his recording studio, appropriately named, Vogelsound Inc.

While at WVOY, Vogel also was involved in sales.

Kaufmann, meanwhile, knows he has "a tough act to follow."

The Mt. Clemens native has a varied background in music. He has worked at WBCH in Hastings, at the television and radio stations at Michigan State University, at a recording studio in Oakland, California and as a musician.

While he was at WBCH, Kaufmann got to know Terry Edger, who at that time, was putting together WVOY.

"I watched him build the station from the ground up," he said. "And I always admired the station. It's an excellent station in terms of equipment and music.

"So I kept in touch, learned about this opening...and here I am."

In addition to the departure of Vogel and the arrival of Kaufmann, WVOY also has announced that John Yaroch will devote his time to sales and thus relinquish his job as news director.

Yaroch will concentrate on sales in Charlevoix County. He said a full-time news director will be hired and that WVOY will "increase its coverage of local news and sports."

Yaroch also said that WVOY will now be affiliated with the CBS network.

Besides six minute news broadcasts on the hour, the CBS network features a more comprehensive 15 minute world news summary at 8 a.m. and 6 p.m. News features by such established journalists as Walter Cronkite, Dan Rather, Mike Wallace, etc. will be aired by WVOY throughout the week. CBS also carries the Win Elliott sports show on weekends.

Seven nights a week, listeners will be able to tune in the CBS Radio Mystery Theater. The radio drama will be broadcast at 10 p.m.

"I'm excited about bringing the CBS network into northwest Michigan," Yaroch said. "Previously, Cadillac and Escanaba were the closest CBS outlets."

Yaroch added that WVOY will continue its connection with the Michigan Farm Network. He also said the station's music will compliment its new format. Most of the music will be adult contemporary, he said.

Don Behrens and Marjorie Kimball

All is well at Ironton Ferry Landing

The new business people in Ironton are happy and doing well, thank you.

Marjorie Kimball and Donald Behrens came to town in the midst of January's snow storms to take over operation of what was then known as "Chester's."

Since then the partners have made lots of improvements to the several businesses which they operate under the heading "Ironton Ferry Landing."

There is a restaurant, a bar, a party store, a boat rental service, a bait and tackle shop, a gas and oil business and rental cabins - all of which require the constant attention of the owners.

The hours are long, too. The restaurant is open from 8 a.m. until 2 a.m. Monday through Saturday and from 8 a.m. until 12 midnight on Sunday. And because the restaurant is almost always open, there is usually someone around to tend to the other businesses if a customer wanders in during off hours. There aren't many off hours at the bait and tackle shop, however, since it is open from 6 a.m. until 2 a.m.

Marjorie Kimball oversees the restaurant, specializing in fish which is served everyday. Walleye and perch are usually on the menu. Thursday night is a special night at the Ironton Ferry Landing. That's when spaghetti is king, much to the delight of an ever increasing crowd, according to the owners.

The rental boats are 15 to 16 foot fishing boats equipped with six horsepower outboard motors, and a 28 foot pontoon boat that may be used for cruising or fishing. Nurm Ramsdale, long time local resident, is in charge of the boats and other waterfront operations.

Operating the Ironton Ferry Landing is a big change for the two refugees from big city marketing and sales jobs, but as Don Behrens guides visitors around the premises and Marjorie Kimball serves her customers, it is obvious they don't miss those jobs.

Owned by Beverly Golling of Petoskey and managed by Richard Keiswetter of Petoskey, Jeans Etc. specializes in jeans and cords, dresses, blouses and other generat sportswear items.

Mrs. Golling cited "Charlevoix's need for a medium priced sportswear store" as one of the main reasons for opening here. Jeans Etc. is located on Bridge Street near the Pine River channel.

The store carries more than a dozen well known brands of clothing for both men and women - including Levis, Lee's, Male, Disco, Bobby Brooks, Wild Oates, Danielle, French Star, Organically Grown, and Hang Ten.

And if what you want is not in stock, it can be delivered in three to five days, Mrs. Golling says. She orders daily from 257 different suppliers.

Jeans Etc. is open from 9:30 a.m. until 5:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday and un Saturday. On Friday, the store is open until 8 p.m.

Mrs. Golling and her husband, Bill, have five children. She has an extensive background in merchandising.

There is also a Jeans Etc. in the Giantway Plaza in Petoskey.

Just over a week ago, Jeans Etc. reduced its prices to aid the cancer fund. Anyone who brought in a pair of jeans or cutoffs received a discount and the store made a donation to the cancer society.

Christian women stress unity and praise

The Charlevoix Area Christian Women met recently at the home of Andie Mathews. This interdenominational group has sponsored two "Women's Days of Renewal" in the Charlevoix Area.

The original purpose of this group, states spokes person Mickey Grooters, was and is to call together the women of this comniunity for the twin goals of unity and praise.

"We came together out of a common desire to foster unity among the women in the differept churches in our community and to provide a framework from which we, together, could praise a common Lord," she said." We began with a vision, no treasury, no organization. The organization is still very loose. We have a treasurer and that's about it.

"At the May 16 meeting," Mrs. Grooters continued, "we felt led to extend an invitation to anyone from the community who would like to meet together. We have grown to enjoy each other's company so much-both devotionally and otherwise that we thought this might be something others would enjoy also."

Gretzie Ames, song and praise leader for the "Days of Renewal" added, "The desire of the group to continue to meet together for fellowship and prayer seems to flow naturally out of the purpose which brought us together – namely, to bring Christian women together in Charlevoix in the bonds of His love and praise. Those who gather are from every denominational background.

The Charlevoix Area Christian Women are meeting on designated Saturday mornings. The next meeting is June 16 at 8:30 and will be held at Nancy Fowler's home at 109 E. Dixon.

When asked what one does that early on a Saturday morning, Mrs. Grooters smiles and says, "Well, we giggle, we pray, we all talk a lot, we share food, we may sing, we may read a portion of scripture, and we are out within two hours. We represent many different churches. We are both Protestant and Roman Catholic. To this point the mission of the group has been to plan, to fund, to publicize and to pray for the community-wide Renewal meetings."

If you are interested in joining and meeting with the Charlevoix Area Christian Women, you are invited to the June 16 meeting. If you have any questions call Lillian Left 547-2362, or Judy Cockfield 547-4138, or Mirian Parker 547-9895.

Vets asked to check policies

Veterans of World War II or the Korean Conflict who have GI insurance policies are asked to check the addresses and beneficiaries named in the policies.

VA officials are finding that many of these veterans at the time they signed up for the GI insurance named parents or former girl friends as beneficiaries and, after marrying, never changed the names on the policies. As a result many problems are being created at the death of these veterans.

Forms for changing the address or beneficiary on such GI insurance policies are available at the office of Charlevoix County Veterans Counselor in the County Building Ronald G. Geer, Veterans Counselor, said.

Vet benefits could be cut

Veterans benefits may be cut if proposed legislation is passed. The Charlevoix V.F.W. post No. 1153 and its Auxiliary have been advised by Eric Sanderson, National Commander in Chief of the V.F.W.

According to the communication, President Carter and the House Budget Committee have recommended that the V.A. budget for 1980 will be far less than that approved for 1979.

If this stands, more than 5,000 beds in VA hospitals will be eliminated and more than 8,600 medical personnel cut which will practically eliminate any medical care for veterans with non-service connected disabilities.

For all veterans in this area it will mean the closing of the VA hospital in Saginaw. Many veterans from the Charlevoix area have been receiving care through the years at this hospital.

Everyone, whether the member of a service organization or not, is asked to write their legislators in Washington urging them to support the Roberts Amendment to be introduced on the House floor that would increase the VA budget.

Mrs. Clarence Goldstick, president-elect of the V.F.W., has urged that everyone write, phone or contact your legislator in person to support this important piece of legislation.

Who was Sarah Edmonds ? She fooled several people during Civil War

By PEG OHLE

Maybe the people of Charlevoix knew about her and maybe they didn't.

"Her" refers to Mrs. Sarah Edmonds Seelye, who with her husband, Linus, lived in Charlevoix during the years 1867 to 1869.

What people may or may not have known was that Mrs. Seelye had served as a soldier and spy in the Civil War.

Dressed in men's clothing and using the name "Franklin Thompson", Mrs. Seelye enlisted in the Union Army in Flint on April 17, 1861 and served with the 2nd Michigan Regiment until she deserted two years later. In those days, there was no physical examination prior to enlisting, so it was easy for her real sex to go unnoticed when she signed up. But the fact that she was able to keep the secret from all the men with whom she served, including her bunk-mates, seems incredible.

And in the end, it was fear of being found out that led to Mrs. Seelye's desertion. She had been injured during the course of duty but refused treatment because it would have resulted in disclosure of her true sex. Pain from the injuries became so great that she was forced to desert from the fighting ranks, but after her recovery and resuming a female sex role, she served as an army nurse. She also wrote a book "Nurse and Spy" in which she related her experiences.

Just before coming to Charlevoix, Sarah Edmonds married Linus Seelye, the young man who had loaned her the clothes with which she had first disguised herself.

The Seelyes were wandering people who apparently moved to Evanston, Ill. after their stay in Charlevoix. They also resided in Ohio, Indiana, Missouri, Kansas, Louisiana, and Texas, where the woman soldier died in 1898. She was later buried in the GAR section of Washington Cemetery in Houston.

The Seelyes had three children, all of whom died in childhood, but two adopted boys grew to manhood.

The fact that Mrs. Seelye once lived in Charlevoix is noted by John Cumming in an article titled "Sarah Edmonds, Civil War Soldier and Spy" in the winter issue of the Chronicle, published by the Historical Society of Michigan. Cumming is head of the Clarke Historical Library at Central Michigan University, where a series of letters written by Mrs. Seelye from Texas to an army acquaintance, are housed.

A lengthy story about her army career and later life also appeared in Volume XVII, 1958, of the Michigan History Magazine.

Maybe Sarah Edmonds Seelye talked about her army career when she lived here, then maybe she didn't.

Hire-A-Teen matches employers with odd jobs with area teens

The Charlevoix County Youth Diversionary Program and the Youth Advisory Council will co-sponsor a HIRE-A-TEEN project for Charlevoix County residents.

The project will serve as a 'clearinghouse' that matches people that have odd jobs, and are willing to pay to have them done, with responsable teens, able to perform the needed service.

Any youth between the ages of 13 and 17, lives in Charlevoix County, and completes a mandatory orientation session, will be eligible to be placed "on call" with the HIRE-A-TEEN project. Youths interested in working through the HIRE-A-TEEN project may register by calling 547-4471, or registering in the main office of their local middle or high schools.

The orientation will cover job habits, employment procedures, job interviews, and job applying steps. The session will also cover on-the-job problems, telephone etiquette and effectiveness with prospective employers. The orientation session will be conducted by the youth Diversionary Worker, the HIRE-A-TEEN Clerk, and the Transitional Services Counselor, Char Eau Intermediate School District.

HIRE-A-TEEN does not employ the youth, vouch for them beyond the orientation session. HIRE-A-TEEN will provide a summary of previous job performances to prospective employers. HIRE-A-TEEN will serve only as a clearinghouse that matches employers with odd jobs with teens who live in the same proximity and will perform the required services for a negotiated wage. The employer will negotiate directly with the youth as to hours, wages, tools and transportation. HIRE-A-TEEN will not insure the youth for liability in any way. The employer is liable for the youth while working on their property. The employer is responsible to follow all minor work laws. The employer and the teen will sign a 'Work Agreement' form, which puts in writing their expectations of each other.

The HIRE-A-TEEN clerk, who performs the duties of job coordinator between the employer and the teen, and record keeper of evaluations, will be employed by the CETA Summer Work Program. Co-supervision will be provided by Gloria Anderson of the Chamber of Commerce, and William Aten Charlevoix County Youth Diversionary Worker. The Chamber of Commerce has agreed to provide a telephone and office space in their building on the corner of Lake and Water Streets in Boyne City.

The orientation meetings for interested youth have been scheduled for the week of June 18 to 21. Youths interested in working through HIRE-A-TEEN must attend one of these sessions.

Schedule for Orientation Sessions

Monday June 18th – Charlevoix Middle School, 10 a.m. in the gym

Tuesday June 19th – East Jordan Middle School, 10 a.m. in the gym.

Thursday June 21st – Boyne City Middle School, 10 a.m. in the gym.

People with odd jobs that are interested in using HIRE-A-TEEN workers, may begin calling the office on Monday June 25. The number at the HIRE-A-TEEN office is 582-6222. For further information, or questions concerning the project, call 547-4471.

Auxiliary officers assume duties at July 5 meeting

Recently installed officers of the Auxiliary of Charlevoix Post No. 1153, Veterans of Foreign Wars, will assume their duties at the July 5 meeting of the organization. Mrs. Earl Elliott of Cheboygan, District 13 president, officiated at the installation.

Mrs. Clarence Goldstick who was installed as president has named the following appointive officers for the year. They are Mrs. Harry Pearsall and Mrs. Joseph Seidel, Americanism and Loyalty; Mrs. Leland Warner and Mrs. Seidel, Buddy Poppy chairpersons; Mrs. Russell Dohm, Camps; Mrs. Kenneth Staley, Cancer Aid/Research; Mrs. Albert Hazel, citations; Mrs. Robert D. Miller, activities; Mrs. Warner, hospital; Mrs. Betty Jackson, membership; Mrs. James Whitley, National Home; Mrs. Ivan Phillips, Legislative; Mrs. Goldstick, publicity; Mrs. Clement Olach, rehabilitation; Mrs. Keith Wagner, safety; Mrs. Michael Thorpe, youth activities; Mrs. Goldstick, Voice of Democracy.

Others are American flag bearer, Mrs. Whitley; V.F.W. flag bearer, Mrs. Thelma Skeel; color bearers, Mrs. Harley Warner, Mrs. Melvin Plum, Mrs. Thomas Hodgkinson and Mrs. Eugene Gibelyou; patriotic instructor, Mrs. Pearsall; pianist, Mrs. Frank Novotny, Jr.; trustees, Mrs. Phillips, Mrs. Hazel and Mrs. Hodgkinson.

All new officers were presented with red, white and blue corsages centered with a Buddy Poppy. Mrs. Elliott was presented with a gift from the Auxiliary.

Hostesses were Mrs. Warner, Mrs. Seidel and Mrs. Jackson who made and decorated a cake in a patriotic motif.

At the business session, the proposed cut in the VA budget was discussed and members urged to ask their legislators to support the Roberts Amendment.

Mrs. Jackson, membership chairman, reported a 100 percent membership on both the local and district levels.

Appreciation was expressed to all those who assisted with the Buddy Poppy sale and participated in the Memorial Day parade. Concern was expressed regarding the lack of interest by spectators when the flags were flown. It is felt that more programs on Americanism should be forthcoming.

The group voted to contribute $183 to the V.F.W. Cancer fund. All V.F.W. members are covered by cancer insurance through their membership dues. In addition, cancer victims receive grants when they are requested.

Mrs. Edna Woodard was initiated as a member. Mrs. Staley, Mrs. Hazel and Mrs. Goldstick reported on the recent district meeting they had attended. Cards for members who are ill were signed and mailed. It was voted to discontinue the social meetings during the months of June, July and August. These are usually held on the third Thursday of the month.

Scouts plant pine seedlings

Charlevoix Boy Scouts, led by Troopmaster John Houting, recently participated in a conservation project on Charlevoix Public School property on May Street and at the Medusa reclaination site on Lakeshore Drive.

The scouts along with Dan Alder, project coordinator, planted 100 red pine seedlings on the two parcels of land. The seedlings were donated by the Medusa Cement Company.

According to Alder, the object of the project "was to give hands-on experience in re-planting red pine seedlings - with correct techniques - to assure maximum success as well as planning the best design to provide proper future protection and beautification scenery."

The parcel of land owned by the school district has been outlined with trees. It will be used by the scouts for future conservation projects as the landscaping needs for the lot develop.

School officials are not sure what the lot will be used for. One possibility is to have the school's vocational education department use the parcel on which to construct a house.

Ma Bell customers here can now bill to third number

Michigan Bell customers in Charlevoix were able to dial their own long distance person-to-person, collect, credit card and bill-to-third-number calls beginning Thursday.

E.W. (Mike) Reid, Michigan Bell local manager, said the company is gradually phasing out its Petoskey long distance operator service operations as part of a continuing program to give customers greater cost and efficiency benefits from new telecommunications technology.

He explained that the new dialing services are made possible by an electronic system with pushbutton consoles for operators which has replaced the older, cord-type operator switchboards.

When the phase-out of the petoskey switchboard was completed Thursday, long distance calls from Charlevoix were routed to the company's electronic long distance center in Saginaw, Reid said.

When making one of the new time-saving calls, customers dial "0" (Operator), immediately followed by the area code and then the telephone number in the distant city, Reid said.

An operator at the company's electronic long distance center in Saginaw will come on the line long enough to get acceptance of a collect call, obtain credit card or bill-to-third numbers, or to get the right person on the line for a person-to-person call.

There will be several customer benefits from this consolidation, Reid explained.

Operator-handled calls will go through much faster, operator response to customer calls will be quicker in most cases because of the bigger "team size" at the company's electronic long distance center in Saginaw, and billing errors will be almost non-existent since billing information will be handled by computers.

Fifth grade already?

Sunrise, Sunset (From: Fiddler on the Roof)
Jerry Block - Sheldon Harnick

Sunrise, Sunset
Is this the little girl I carried
Is this the little boy at play
I don't remember growing older when did they
When did she get to be a beauty
When did he grow to be this tall
Wasn't it yesterday when they were small

Sunrise, sunset
Sunrise, sunset
Swiftly flow the days
Seedlings turn overnight to sunflowers blossoming even as we gaze
Sunrise, sunset
Sunrise, sunset
Swiftly fly the years
One season following another laden with happiness and tears

Now is the little boy a bridegroom
Now is the little girl a bride under the canopy I see them side by side place the gold ring around her finger share the sweet wine and break the glass soon the full circle will have come to pass

This time of year is hard on my sinuses. Graduations, weddings. I can't seem to last through a ceremony of this sort without a box of Kleenex. The participants don't even have to be relatives or friends. If they happen to be, the situation turns into a two-box affair. I was probably the one you heard sobbing as Luke Skywalker received his medal from Princess Leah during "Star Wars." What will happen when our own children come down some future aisle, is hard to predict. There have been premonitions along the way: Amy was a flower girl; Jenny carried the crown to the Venetian Queen; Laura lost a tooth coming down the sidewalk on her plastic worm. I didn't do well at any of these occasions.

Just yesterday our son brought a message home from school: "Scott Kelly has been promoted to fifth grade."

I sank down in the chair behind my typewriter. "Fifth grade, is it possible already?" I had almost forgotten about fifth grade.

Fifth grade was my first teaching assignment fresh out of college. I was Miss Webster in those days.

"Miss Webster," exclaimed one of my prospective students. "Boy, am I surprised. Your name sounds real old."

I decided forthwith that communication would be one of my major objectives of the year. No generation gaps because I was older than 10, or had an old-sounding name. We played baseball, made table maps of Jamestown and conquered fractions together. I got a little younger and they got a little older – we compromised, and communicated. My mailbox was a shoe box on my desk. The kids would drop me notes when I was eating lunch, or otherwise occupied, just for the anonymity of it, then sign their names. Communiques ran something like this:

Miss Webster, I need a confonded desk. If I had a big desk I could sit strat. "Please." David P.

Miss Webster can I see you about Central Park this After Noon Karen D.

Could you take Arthur out of our group or put me in another group? Bill V.

Miss Webster next time if possible when we change our seats can I sit next to Lisa I will not talk to her Kim E.

.. Could you move kenny and Arthur? Bill V.

If kanser is caused by smoking. Why don't they stop selling cigerates. Karen D.

Will you move Kenny because when the bell rings he won't shut up or else move me? Bill V.

have I Ben doing my work good having Ben trying hard, ferm Becky

Will you move Bill V. because he will not leve me alnne. Kenny

I saved them for a possible sequel to "Up the Down Staircase", an endeavor which never really got off the ground due to a lack of critical material.

Sunrise, sunset. Fifth grade already? I marvelled as I went out to check the mail. I had traded in my "old" name year ago. A folded piece of notbook paper was in the box stamped with last year's Christmas seal.

Dear Mom,
Will you please keep my bratty little sisters away from my drum set?

Scott K.

Yes, I suppose it's possible.

CHARLEVOIX COUNCIL MINUTES

JUNE 4, 1979
8:00 P.M.

The Common Council of the City of Charlevoix met on the above date and time with Mayor Supernaw presiding.

Councilmen present Wood, Muma, Whitley, Porter Timms and Roloff. Absent: None.

The Minutes of the May 21, 1979 regular meeting were approved as presented in writing and as recorded in the Council Minutes Book.

Council adjourned to the Board of Appeals.

Following the Board of Appeals meeting, roll call of the Council was again taken with all Council members being present.

Richard Krueger, Charlevoix Hospital Administrator, and representatives of the Hospital Board, appeared before the Council to ask for relief in the rate the hospital pays for electricity. Mr. Krueger stated that the recent increase from 04 to 055 per kilowatt hour would result in a $8,000.00 per year increase in the Hospital's electric bill. He also stated that the new rate may defer installation of new equipment currently proposed for the facility due to the increased cost of running it. The possibility of the hospital purchasing power from another source was discussed with Council generally agreeing that they would prefer to continue servicing the hospital if possible. Acting City Manager, James Brinker, stated that Daverman Associates, Inc. are currently doing a rate review study for the City. Council generally agreed to table any action on the Hospital's request pending receipt of the result of the rate study.

Hal Hill, a member of the General Public present advised Council that he would be willing to work with the Acting City Manager on the electric rates and fuel cost adjustment. Mr. Hill stated that he has had considerable background in this area. Council generally agreed to accept Mr. Hill's offer and indicated that his expertise in this matter would be greatly appreciated.

Council agreed to attend a ceremony at the Municipal Airport on Tuesday, June 12, 1979 at 3:00 p.m. commemoraiting the 50th Anniversary of the "First Michigan Air Tour".

Council generally agreed to allow the Charlevoix Chamber of Commerce to use East Park for Chamber sponsored events on July 14, July 26-29, and August 11, 1979.

Ted Stevens of WJML radio station appeared before Council regarding the proposed Hawaiian Tropic Weekend in the City. Mr. Stevens stated that he had presented the program to the Chamber of Commerce and they offered no objection to it if Council had none provided the City received as much promotion as WJML and Hawaiian Tropic.

Moved by Councilman Wood and supported by Councilman Timms to approve the proposal presented by WJML for a Hawaiian Tropic Weekend to be held at Ferry Beach from 12:00 p.m. until 8:00 p.m. on July 14, 1979 provided Hawaiian Tropic files a certificate of $100,000.00 in liability insurance coverage with the City prior to the event.

Motion was adopted by the following yea and nay vote: Yeas, Councilmen Wood, Muma, Whitley, Porter, Timms, and Roloff. Nays None. Absent: None.

The following Resolution was offered and moved for its adoption by Councilman Porter and supported by Councilman Muma.

RESOLUTION 79 6 1

WHEREAS, James M. Brinker has been separated from the employment of the City of Flushing on 10/29/78, and was employed by the City of Charlevoix in 1/3/79.

BOARD OF APPEALS

The Board of Appeals convened with Councilmen Wood, Muma, Whitley, Porter, Timms and Roloff present. Absent: None.

Moved by Councilman Whitley and supported by Councilman Timms to reduce the required set backs at Captain's Watch Condominium from 40 feet to 25 feet on the east and west side yards to allow construction of carports, provided they adhere to the landscape plan as presented to Council on this date.

Motion was adopted by the following yea and nay vote: Yeas, Councilmen Muma, Whitley, Timms, and Roloff. Nays: Councilmen Wood and Porter. Absent: None.

The Board of Appeals discussed a request by Alfred Bergmann of 545 Petoskey Avenue to replace a mobile home located on the back half of his lot with a new unit. The City Attorney advised the Board that the present trailer is a non-conforming use according to the Zoning Ordinance, and, as such, cannot be upgraded beyond 50% of its cash value. He also stated that the Board does not have the authority to approve the request as the Zoning Ordinance does not allow new mobile home units outside a mobile home park and that said Ordinance offers no provision for a variance. The Board generally agreed to consider a variance to allow a small home on a foundation at the site, if Mr. Bergmann wished to consider this alternative.

The Board of Appeals adjourned.

Gibbons handles city's legal questions

By PEG OHLE

Mike Gibbons serves as city attorney and is engaged in the general practice of law in Charlevoix. This week he talks with the Courier about his work and other things.

COURIER: How long have you been city attorney?

GIBBONS: Since May, 1978. I was appointed by the mayor under the Fourth Class Cities Act. Under the new charter, such appointments would be made by the mayor and approved by the council. Removal would be made by the council.

COURIER: What are your dutics as city attorney?

GIBBONS: I attend city council meetings to advise them on any legal questions that may come up, draft and review all city contracts, draft ordinances, and enforce the reeently adopted municipal traffic code. Under the old Motor Vehicle Law, it was the responsibility of the county prosecutor to handle these traffic violations. Now the city gets a portion of the money generated by fines and costs.

COURIER: What other public offices have you held?

GIBBONS: I was chief administrative assistant and assistant prosecutor in the Ingham County Prosecutor's Office.

In this job, I did extensive criminal trial work in former justice courts, district courts, and county circuit courts. I maintained an office at the Ingham County Jail in Mason, directing general investigations, search warrants, extradictions, and issuance of criminal warrants.

COURIER: Any other offices?

GIBBONS: For four years, I was a Hearings Officer in the State Department of Commerce, where I had a variety of duties, including acting as a resource for the Financial Institutons Bureau.

COURIER: And you served in the Charlevoix County Prosecutor's Office, didn't you?

GIBBONS: Yes, I worked as assistant prosecutor under Roy Hayes for a little over a year.

COURIER: Do you have any partners in your law practice?

GIBBONS: No, I'm a single practitioner.

COURIER: How long have you lived in Charlevoix?

GIBBONS: We came back five years ago. I was born and raised in Charlevoix and graduated from high school here in 1956.

COURIER: Then what did you do?

GIBBONS: I served in the Army for two years, then went to Aquinas College in Grand Rapids and received a Bachelor of Arts degree in political science.

COURIER: Where did you get your law degree?

GIBBONS: At Wayne State Law School.

COURIER: Your wife is a local girl, isn't she?

GIBBONS: Yes, she was Marilyn Neff and graduated from Charlevoix High School in 1957.

COURIER: How many children do you have?

GIBBONS: Four boys. Christopher is 13, Tim is 12, Pat is 11, and Matt is 7.

COURIER: Do you belong to any organizations?

GIBBONS: The Knights of Columbus and the American Legion.

COURIER: What do you do in your spare time?

GIBBONS: We've been devoting most of our outside time to restoring our Greek classical house – preserving the architectural features.

COURIER: You had an operatinn recently. What was it?

GIBBONS: It was fur cornnary artery disease. I had by-pass surgery April 11 at St. Joseph's Mercy Hospital in Ann Arbor and was discharged nine days later. I spent the next two weeks at home convalescing and came back to the office about the first of May.

COURIER: By-passes are becoming quite common, aren't they?

GIBBONS: Yes, at St. Joseph's Mercy they average three by-pass operations a day.

COURIER: What restrictions have been placed on your activities?

GIBBONS: Only on my diet and smoking. I'm supposed to engage in rhythmic exercises; walking is the best. Losing weight is tougher than the surgery was.

COURIER: There was some talk a little while back that you were going to move out of town. Are you?

GIBBONS: No. Before I had my operation it was thought that a warmer elimate would be better for me, but that's not true now. Dur house has been on the market and if we sell it, we'll buy a smaller une.

COURIER: What changes have you seen in Charlevoix recently?

GIBBONS: People coming back to Charlevoix to live. In the fifties, all the high school grads left town. Now the trend has reversed itself. Six of my classmates have moved back and re-established themselves since I came back. There's a year-round economy now, and more job opportunities. Residents are largely here by choice, not by necessity. I gave up a good job to come back, not only because of family ties, but because Charlevoix is a good place to bring up kids.

FAITH MAKES GOOD NEIGHBORS OF GREAT NATIONS

The boundary line dividing two countries can become a barricade of mutual hostility, but in the case of Canada and the United States it has always served as a bridge of friendship between two peoples with such trust, respect and understanding as to make the celebration of Canada U.S. Goodwill Week quite unnecessary. Nowhere along the three thousand mile borderline that spans our continent have security measures ever been needed, and the citizens on both sides may enter and leave each other's land whenever they wish. This is a fine example of the spirit of brotherhood that has been taught by every religious faith, in every land. Wherever you live, you will learn this by attending the Church of your choice

"Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. Love worketh no ill to his neighbor: therefore love is the lulfilling of the law."

-Romons 13:9, 10

A living proof to all the world of loith in brotherhood.

Davis proposes aid for winter navigation property damage

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- Individuals or units of government who could prove property damages directly resulting from the 7-year winter navigation demonstration program would be able to receive financial compensation under a bill introducing in the U.S. House of Representatives today by Northern Michigan Congressman Bob Davis.

The bill orders the Secretary of the Army to determine the amount of compensation to be made, and to certify the amount to the Secretary of the Treasury. The damage must have been sustained as a direct result of the winter navigation demonstration program, and the application for compensation would have to be filed within two years to the completion of the project.

"While everyone seems to be involved in the heated debate over whether or not winter shipping should be continued, people have lost sight of the fact that there are property owners who have already suffered substantial damages. This bill would provide a mechanism by which these property owners could file to recover their losses," Davis noted.

Although Davis has not taken a stand on whether or not winter shipping should be continued, he said he would introduce legislation to compensate for all damages resulting from extended navigation if the year-round program becomes permanent.

"I am in the process of gathering facts on the effects of winter navigation, including economic benefits and costs. Possible environmental damages are of special concern to me, as are the problems being caused for communities along the St. Mary's River. Before I would even consider supporting expansion of a winter navigation program, I would have to be assured that the problems along the St. Mary's were resolved," Davis explained.

"I think this bill will go a long way in providing just compensation to the people who have suffered property damages over the last seven years. People who have suffered as a direct result of the demonstration program should not be ignored in the consideration of the total scope of winter shipping.

Wedding

Greer-Novak

Kathy M. Greer and Carl Maxwell Novak exchanged their marriage vows at a double ring service solemnized at the United Church of Christ at Clinton, Michigan, Saturday. Both are from Tecumseh.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Joseph M. Greer of Taylor and Max Novak of Charlevoix and the late Mrs. Novak.

The Rev. Roy V. Wagner officiated at the ceremony in the presence of 125 guests. Deena Haugen of Brooklyn sang "Just the Way You Are," "For Baby, for Bobbie" and "Sometimes" accompanied by the church organist who also played a program of traditional music, the processional and recessional.

The bride was given in marriage by her parents. For her wedding she made her full length gown of chiffon and satin fashioned with a lace bodice and chiffon cape. She wore a white picture hat banded with a light blue ribbon and carried a single red rose.

Frankie J. Greer of Hartselle, Ala., assisted her sister-in-law as matron of honor and Mary Ann Michalak of Roseville and Deena Haugen of Brooklyn were bridesmaids. They wore identical light blue gowns and matching picture hats and carried single yellow roses.

Shari Prater of New Boston, cousin of the bride, as flower girl wore a light blue dress and hat and carried a basket of mini-carnations. Christopher Greer, nephew of the bride, was ringbearer.

Charles M. Novak of Grand Rapids served as his twin brother's best man. Jerry Parsel of Centerville, Ohio, and Roger Young of Tecumseh were groomsmen. Joseph M. Greer, brother of the bride, and Ed Oxley seated the guests.

A reception followed in the church parlors where Roger and Barbara Morrison served as master and mistress of ceremonies.

After a wedding trip to the Detroit area, the couple will be at home at 606 Blanchard, Tecumseh.

Both are graduates of Michigan State University. The bride teaches at Jackson County Weston High School and the bridegroom at Tecumseh High School.

A rehearsal dinner, hosted by Mr. Novak, was held at Hathaway House in Blissfield.

Lepman - Kiteley

A profusion of apple blossoms, lavendar and white lilacs and white daisies decorated "The Big House" at the Loeb Farm Saturday for the wedding of Adele Hazel Lepman and George Michael Kiteley.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Richard Lepman of Loeb Farms, Charlevoix, and Northbrook, Ill., and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kiteley of Charlevoix.

The Rev. H.E. Kruse, Jr., of the Ironton Congregational Church officiated at the double ring service in the presence of 200 guests. Lighted tapers interspersed among the floral arrangements formed the setting for the impressive service. Les Payne, at the piano, played a program of traditional music, the processional, the recessional and "Sunrise, Sunset."

The bride was given in marriage by her father. For her wedding she chose a chapel length gown of ivory satin and lace fashioned with a lace-trimmed bodice and long sleeves and full skirt. A band of lace from her great-grandmother's wedding gown secured her tiered veil of bridal illusion. She carried a bouquet of white lilacs and apple blossoms tied with long white ribbons.

Martha Lepman of Northbrook served as her sister's maid of honor. Elizabeth Nathan of Highland Park, Ill., Mrs. Ronald Shapton of Knoxville, Tenn., sister of the bridegroom, and Mrs. John Maborski of Boulder, Colo., cousin of the bride, were bridesmaids. They wore identical gowns styled with fitted bodices, spaghetti straps and full skirts in pastel shades of pink, blue, yellow and green and carried bouquets of lilacs and apple blossoms tied with white ribbons.

Craig Golovich assisted the bridegroom as best man. Charles Kiteley, Jr., brother of the bridegroom, David Lepman of Northbrook, Ill., brother of the bride, and David Siegrist were groomsmen. Richard Tad Lepman of Berkley, Calif., and Robert Lepman of Northbrook, Ill., brothers of the bride, and Ronald Shapton of Knoxville, Tenn., brother-in-law of the bridegroom, seated the guests.

A dinner reception, hosted by the bride's parents, followed in the rooms of "The Big House."

Following a wedding trip to Colorado, the couple will be at home after June 11 at Route 2, Charlevoix.

Charlevoix observes adopt-a-cat-month

National Adopt-A-Cat Month is being observed this June in Charlevoix County, according to Vernice Smith, manager of the Charlevoix County Humane Society.

During the month, the shelter will be giving away free adoption kits to every person adopting a cat or kitten. The kits include a 48-page cat care booklet; coupons for free cat food; an adoption certificate suitable for framing; the official Cat-egorical Contract; and letters from Morris, the finicky felinc of 9 Lives fame who serves as official spokescat for the national campaign.

The adoption kits are compliments of 9-Lives Cat Food, which is sponsoring the program for the American Humane Association. Since there are more homeless felines available for adoption in June than at any other time, the month has been designated as National Adopt-A-Cat Month by the AHA.

"We have dozens of lovable friendly felines in our shelter right now just waiting for a home to call their own," said Mrs. Smith. Among them are a white cat, calicos, and a grey, and several that look like Morris. Any one of the 25 cats and kittens in the shelter would make a wonderful family pet.

According to Mrs. Smith, any person wishing to adopt a cat can visit the Charlevoix County Humane Society, 1004 Grant St. in Charlevoix, daily from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m. For a $2.50 adoption fee, your new pet will be your friend for all of his nine lives.

Council names James Brinker city manager

By Dennis Chase

The search for a city manager is over.

The Charlevoix City Council Monday appointed James Brinker to the $22,000 a year job. Brinker - up until Monday - had been acting city manager since April following the departure of Norm Gaffney. He was originally hired at the start of the year as the city's comptroller.

Mayor Sam Supernaw said council met with Brinker Wednesday to discuss the vacancy. Afterwards, council offered the Flint native the job.

Ironically, Brinker did not apply fur the job when it first opened up. In fact, council was rebuffed twice before it asked Brinker if he would like the job.

"We started interviewing two to three weeks ago," Supernaw said. "We made offers to two candidates and both rejected so we sat back, reconsidered and looked at the alternatives.

"In the meantime, Jim re-evaluated his position, saw the challenge, and told us if we wanted him for the job he would take it."

On his change of heart, Brinker said, "I was encouraged by the staff and by some citizens in town to take the job.

"There's a lot of work to be done, but I like the challenge."

When asked if he felt comfortable with the job, he replied, "If I didn't I wouldn't have accepted the job."

Brinker said his first priority as city manager is "to find a replacement for me as soon as possible."

Prior to coming to Charlevoix, Brinker served eight years as city treasurer in Flushing.

In other action, council referred a request from Consumers Power to its committee meeting Monday. The utility is asking for a purchase order from the city to pay for the upgrading of the substation that supplies electricity to the city.

Consumers Power has already started work on the substation, which is located on Charlevoix's south side. According to John Goense, general manager for Consumers Power Company's north region, the utility is increasing the capacity of the substation by replacing regulators with larger units and by adding forced air cooling to the transformer bank. The improvements will increase Charlevoix's capacity from 7,000 KVA to 8,600 KVA per month.

A company official said the upgrading is essential because Charlevoix's demand for electricity has almost reached the substation's capacity.

"We have already started the project," the official said. "Our concern is that great."

The modifications at the substation should handle the city's electrical needs for five to six years, the official said.

The total project cost is $37,800. However, the city would receive a revenue credit of $15,000. Consumers Power would need a deposit from the city for the difference - $22,800.

A spokesman for the utility said the deposit is "subject to refund."

Council also approved a fee schedule for swimming lessons offered by the Charlevoix Recreation program. For city residents it will cost $7 per student and $14 per family (increases of $2 and $4 respectively) and for non-residents it will cost $10 per student and $20 per family (also $2 and $4 increases). The fee for three and four year old classes is $5 - an increase of $2.

According to Dwight Boss, the program director, revenues totaled $1,400 last year while expenditures totaled $2,100. The increases, he said, should help balance the fund.

Michigan Amateur underway

By Dennis Chase

Can John Morse make it two straight?

That question will be answered this week as 325 amateur golfers from the State of Michigan tee off in the 68th annual Michigan Amateur.

Morse is the defending champ. But he'll have his hands full trying to repeat this year. The tournament is loaded with top notch amateur golfers. Among the entries are Glenn Johnson, a five time winner; Bud Stevens; Pete Green; and Lou Wendrow, the 1946 titleholder.

The tournament got underway yesterday (Tuesday). Qualifying rounds are being played at two sites - the Belvedere Golf Club and the Antrim Dells Country Club. Play will continue throughout the week. Two players will survive the match play and square off for the title at 1 p.m. Saturday at the Belvedere.

The Belvedere course was closed for two days following rain storms on Friday and Saturday nights to make sure that it would be in top shape for the tournament.

The Antrim Dells course was open following the storms, but golf pro Gene Neyman says it's in excellent condition.

Antrim Dells replaces Harbor Point as the second course for the qualifying rounds. The Golf Association of Michigan made the switch late last year. Members of the association liked the 6750 yard course and its proximity to Charlevoix. The course is about 10 miles south of Charlevoix off U.S.-31.

The Golf Association of Michigan sponsors the tournament.

Thursday is the first day of summer. And with all the rain we've had, area residents are getting eager for the hot summer months. Photographer Sally Tudor captured some of the early signs of summer - like this young boy playing on a swing. For more of Sally's summer photos turn to page 6.

Board approves resolution for bond qualifications

By Fran Martin

The Charlevoix Board of Education, at its regular meeting Monday night, officially closed out the 1978-79 fiscal year which ends June 30 by approving a resolution for bond qualification; approving the payment of debt retirement obligations; approving a summer tax collections; selling the Building Trades house and expressing its gratitude to Clement J. Wagner.

When the residents of the school district approved a $700,000 bond issue which will underwrite the cost of an addition to the high school, the board applied for permission to sell the bonds at that time. The first qualification was given by the State Board of Education. Following the approval of the bond qualification resolution by the board, the State Board of Education will recommend to the Municipal Finance Commission that it allow the sale of bonds in order to build the addition. The approval of the resolution by the board was necessary to obtain the final bond qualification by the Municipal Finance Commission which is expected before the end of the month.

The board approved the payment of debt retirement obligations. A total of $58,838 to the City National Bank, Trust Division, Detroit on the bonds dated April 1, 1959 (the high school) and $125,137 to the National Bank of Detroit, Trust Division, Detroit, on bonds dated July, 1968, were OK's and will be paid by July 1.

A resolution relating to the levying of 50 percent of the winter tax at this time in the city of Charlevoix was approved by the board. It was explained that by levying the taxes under the limitations of the Headlee Tax Amendment, the school district would levy one-half mill less than was levied last year. This includes the millage necessary to raise the monies for the high school addition.

The board accepted the bid of $43,750 for the Building Trades House constructed in Hampton Village. The bid does not include floor covering. Its purchase by Miss Elzinga is contingent on obtaining the necessary loan.

Supt. Gordon W. VanWieren advised the board that it was covered with liability (errors and omissions) insurance with a private company. The explanation was given because some boards of edueation had their insurance with their association. In some instances this was not renewed.

Mrs. Connie Pointner gave a brief report on a meeting of the newly-organized library board and that a program to encourage students to read during the summer months and a summer story hour were being promoted.

Mrs. pointner also suggested that principals of the three schools present resumes of the highlights of the school year in their respective buildings.

Clement J. Wagner, who was concluding his brief tenure on the board to fill out an unexpired term, received an expression of gratitude from the board and administration for his dedicated service. A former member of the board, Wagner agreed to serve out the unexpired term of James J. Haggard until an election could be held. Elaine Martin was elected to fill the vacancy.

Vincent Olach was given permission by the board to sell a 1971 station wagon which has 126,000 miles on it. Permission was granted.

The organizational meeting of the board will be held at 7:30 p.m. Monday, July 2.

Red Cross Bloodmobile here Tuesday; quota 125 pints

The Red Cross Bloodmobile will visit Charlevoix on Tuesday, June 26.

The Bloodmobile will be housed at the American Legion Post home at 106 East Garfield Avenue from 1 until 7 p.m.

The quota for the visit has been set at 125 pints.

In recent summer blood drives, Charlevoix has fallen short of its quota, a spokesman for the program said, adding that this is unfortunate because the summer months are the time of greatest demand because of the increased number of traffic accidents and surgery scheduled during the summer vacation period.

Previous donors will be called by a telephone committee. Others may call 547-9314 to make an appointment to donate blood.

Anyone between the ages of 17 and 65 years may donate blood. Seventeen-year-olds must have permission from a parent or guardian each time he or she gives. These permission slips may be picked up at the Charlevoix High School office or Williams Dockside Pharmacy up until June 26.

Mr. and Mrs. Herman Izor will be coordinating the blood drive. Others assisting will be Nancy Fowler, Fran Tollas, Mary Biddick, Lil Left, Andy Mathews and Loretta Towsley.

As always in the past, Kappa Sigma and Xi Epsilon Gamma chapters of Beta Sigma Phi sorority will be soliciting refreshments and providing workers for the canteen the day the Bloodmobile is in Charlevoix.

Bad weather and equipment malfunctions slows the Metolius on its way to Europe

By Sara Gay Dammann

Charlevoix, as everyone knows, attracts a diversity of boaters. Round Lake Harbor is ranked highly by Great Lakes sailors and power-boaters because of its design, Charlevoix' beauty and the convenience of docking in the middle of town.

Fewer people realize that Round Lake regularly plays host to sailors who have come seeking refuge from rough or foggy weather on the lakes.

Each year uncounted boaters slip into Round Lake and tie up to ride out storms.

Each year at least one remarkable boat turns up seeking a safe harbor.

This year has been no exception. Last week the 67 foot ketch (two masted sail boat) Metolius, bound for Europe via the Lakes, spent two days riding out some bad weather and repairing radar and compass in Round Lake.

It's not Metolius' length alone that makes her unique. Sixty seven foot boats, while not a dime a dozen, are not a vanishing species, yet.

But Metolius is unusual because she is designed to be sailed by two people – her owners Kim and Reidun Lundgren. Two additional "crew" now on board are Kim's 18-year-old son Shane and their 5-year-old son Tor.

Charlevoix became an inadvertant way station in their path to the Mediterranean when a combination of radar problems, compass off 30 degrees and rain and fog forced them to seek a safe refuge.

Her tall masts, long graceful lines and the unusual flag flying from her stern turned many heads.

The flag, the ensign of the Royal Norwegian Yacht Club attracted the attention of some other visitors to Charlevoix who quickly went to talk in their native language with Reidun and Tor. Reidun in Norwegian. Her husband Kim is an American of Danish descent.

Their story is enough to make a sailor, or dreaming landlubber sign on as crew. But no openings exist.

Kim and Reidun whose homes include Oregon, Berlin, and whatever ports they visited inbetween, have been sailing together for some six years. They met when working for Pan American Airways, Kim as pilot, Reidun as a stewardess, on the round the world flights.

They both left Pan Am and Kim now operates his own airline – Air Berlin in West Germany – and ranches in Oregon, which they visit when not at sea.

They started sailing with a 26 foot sloop in San Francisco Bay, graduating to a 43 foot English yawl (two masted) Wishstream, built for Sandhurst Military College in England. Tor, then 3 months old, took his first extended cruise from Denmark to Finland on Wishstream. Later they sailed from Europe to the Caribbean, covering virtually all of the Caribbean and West Indies, then followed the Tall Ships from Bermuda to Newport in 1976, eventually selling Wishstream in Boston. In the process Tor became an accomplished scuba diver.

Metolius, three years in designing and building, is a Chinook Indian name for an Oregon River. Kim, an architecture graduate of the University of California, worked closely with Jim Hartvig Anderson, a Danish naval architect, designing a boat that had all the clean lines and classical looks of traditional ketch and was simple enough for Kim and Reidun to sail alone.

Palmer Johnson Inc. in Sturgeon Bay, Wis., built the all aluminun ketch, which was commissioned last September. She is now on her maiden cruise.

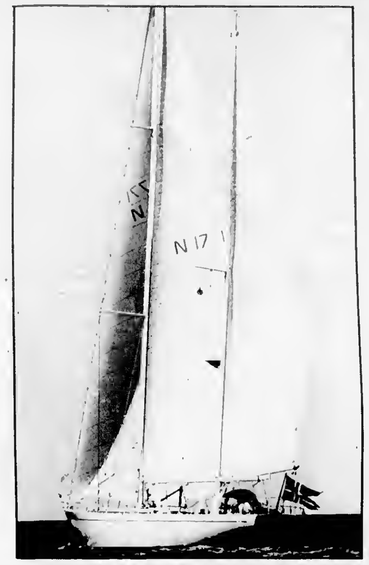
The book shelf over the navigational table is some indication of Metolius' future. "Pilots", books of vital supplemental information not appearing on navigational charts, for Africa, South America, the English Channel, Irish Coast, West Indies, North Sea, Scandanvia, were but a few lining the shelves.

Navigational equipment includes both radar and Loran C., which is one of the latest aides to navigation only installed on Great Lakes Coast Guard cutters within the last decade.

Below decks, Metolius is a comfortable combination of dark woods and bright prints. Purposefully non-nautical designs and simple furniture provide the sailors a chance to escape the serious sailing atmosphere above decks. A semi-circular settee faces a fireplace, designed to burn either coal or wood, in a small living room.

As she sailed out of Charlevoix, headed for Mackinac Island, electric windows raised the three basic sails – genoa, main and mizzen. And when the diesel was shut off, Metolius moved through the choppy seas simultaneously graceful and steady.

Metolius' unplanned visit is reminiscent of the visit in 1976 of Spaniel, the Polish racing yacht which had come in 3rd in the TransAtlantic singlehanded race and sought refuge later in Charlevoix when Great Lakes weather became too much for the veteran of the high seas. Or the following year of the visit of the unusual cutter Aria, another Palmer Johnson aluminum boat, 87 feet long, all electric, with a boomless main sail. Aria, like Metolius, came for radar work at Charlevoix's Fairport Marina.



Otto Brandt has seen his tax dollars at work - and he's happy

By Peg Ohle

Otto Brandt went to the meeting of the Charlevoix County Board of Commissioners last week to tell them, "I have seen some of my tax dollars at work. I am a happy man."

Brandt is a part-time resident of South Arm Township, owning property at the intersection of La Londe and Dutchman's Bay roads.

For over three years, Brandt has been fighting the battle of sand, sand which washes from the roads onto his property after every storm. The drainage ditch which should have carried the silt away is filled up, causing the constant wash. Even the expenditure of $3,000 to get rid of the sand bought only temporary relief.

Brandt went to the road commission, township officials, the drain commissioner, the soil erosion and sedimentation enforcement officer and the DNR for help, but jurisdictional problems were always in the way.

Finally, a few months ago, Brandt asked the board of commissioners for help, and they authorized county Prosecutor Scott Beatty to try to solve the problem. It took several meetings with all concerned, but an amicable solution was reached. That's why Brandt went to the meeting last week.

He was pleased with the "give and take" engaged in by all officials and wanted to thank them personally – Mr. Welch, Mr. Healey, Mr. Geer, and Mr. Beatty.

"You have good men working for the county," he said.

He also had a suggestion: "Since it is time-consuming and expensive for part-time residents to make special trips to let their thoughts be known, once a year send notices to all taxpayers announcing a 'taxpayers' weekend.' Set aside three hours on a Saturday and three hours on Sunday to let people talk about anything except taxes. That would help us."

As a result of Brandt's tenacity and the "good offices" of county officials, Dutchman's Bay Road will have a new drainage system, a new boat launching ramp will be built on a different site, better park facilities will be provided on the nearby DNR land, and Brandt will be relieved of unwanted sand.

Keep an eye on the parking meter, over 500 tickets issued last week

By Dennis Chase

A disgruntled car owner who found three parking tickets on his windshield in one day had just one comment:

"He must have been on the school track team because he sure is fast!"

Meter man Craig Boss, indeed, was on the Charlevoix High School track team this spring. But it is not his sprinters speed that's responsible for the 500 plus parking tickets he issued last week. It's simply that people are not putting enough pocket change into the meters.

"Not many people knew that we would be enforcing parking meter violations last week," Boss explained. "And I decided to clamp down so everyone would know."

Boss started handing out tickets on Tuesday. In fact, he handed out 150 Tuesday, 122 Wednesday and 140 Thursday. Friday was his busiest day of the week and he was predicting that upwards of 170 cars would be ticketed that day.

"I think a lot of people get upset when they see a parking ticket on their car," Boss said, "but the tickets are only 50 cents.

"And when people realize that the violation is only 50 cents they relax. Fifty cents is not that much. Only one guy has been nasty about it. He had a few selected expletives for me. I listened to him then walked away. I think most people realize that it's my job and that it's their fault they got a ticket. But if anyone does have a complaint I'll listen and then I may tell them to go to City Hall – that's where the decisions are made."

Boss patrols the streets from 9 a.m. until 6 p.m. He has the option of working 40-48 hours a week.

This fall he plans on enrolling at Lake Superior State College at Sault Ste. Marie. What does he plan to study? You guessed it – criminal justice.

A job well done

The Charlevoix City Council made a thoughtful gesture Monday night. Council agreed to send a letter thanking the Charlevoix Housing Commission for a job well done.

In case you didn't read about it, the housing commission was informed by U.S. Sen. Donald Riegle that funds have been approved by HUD in Grand Rapids for a public housing project in Charlevoix. Riegle said that $3,045,263 would be earmarked to build 62 units for seniors and handicapped persons.

The commission is quick to thank Riegle for his support, but they deserve praise, too.

For five years the commission has sought to obtain elderly housing for Charlevoix. They have worked diligently on this pruject. As Councilman Dr. Jeff Porter noted Monday night, "They stuck it out."

As a result, it appears Charlevoix will get senior eitizen housing. And we can thank the fortitude of the Charlevoix Housing Commissiun for that.

County is losing 300-500 acres of crop land yearly

Editor:

Recently someone in Charlevoix told me he was not aware of the importance of agriculture in Charlevoix County. I agreed to get some statistics from Ed Rebman, County Extension Director. Here are the latest figures (1974) on crop acreage and production for Charlevoix County.

	Acres	Production
Corn	2,551	180,455 Bushels
Corn Silage	1,887
Wheat	307	10,818 Bushels
Hay	10,195	20,000 Tons
Potatoes	17	3,253 Bushels
Dairy Products	Sales-	$1,429,000.00
Total Sale of All Agricultural Products		$2,897,000.00

The last figure includes sale of other products such as berries, pears, apricots, plums, peaches, apples, cherries, beef, pork, lambs, wool, maple syrup, asparagus, eggs, poultry, honey and vegetables.

A dismaying fact comes from Mr. William Grimm of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Committee. Charlevoix County is losing between 300-500 acres of cropland each year to development. Charlevoix County has 26,000 acres of cropland. Of the above acreage 15,000 is prime agricultural land.

Some legislation has been passed to make it financially attractive for sellers of farm land to keep their acreage in agricultural use. However, this legislation has not gone far enough.

"If the present trend continues," Mr. Grimm stated, "In 50 years our agricultural crop land will be gone."

Bring on summer!

Before another issue of the Courier arrives, summer will have bowed upon the scene, full of warm kisses for her appreciative fans.

And Charlevoix is ready for warm weather as it has never been before. Since last summer, we have survived a record cold snap of 37 degrees below zero, a near-record snowfall and one of the longest, coldest, wettest springs in the history of the human race.

So bring on the days of pretzels and beer. We're ready for them.

Charlevoix, incidentally, has emerged from the winter doldrums in fine shape. All the downtown shops are bustling and the number of shoppers seems to multiply each weekend. Window boxes have been planted, store windows polished, a little paint here, some remodeling there.

But have you noticed the sidewalks?

I wouldn't pretend to know who or what is to blame, but downtown Charlevoix has more than it's share of broken and patched sidewalks, more than a city should have when it likes to tack "the Beautiful" onto its name.

I would like to see the city council appoint a sidewalk commission to review the city's sidewalks and establish a system of priorities for repairing old ones and laying new ones.

As the energy crunch worsens, sidewalks are going to be of increasing importance as more and more people adopt "shanks mare" as a mode of transportation. Yet today it is impossible to walk from city limits to city limits along U.S. 31 on sidewalks.

Huge neighborhoods on both the North and the South sides have no sidewalks at all, and pedestrians must share the streets with automobile traffic. This practice is patently hazardous, particularly for little children.

We (and this includes Charlevoix Township) have even failed to provide sidewalks along streets and roads leading to Charlevoix Elementary School – a full decade after the school has been in business.

After looking at Charlevoix's sidewalks – or lack of them – today, it is difficult to realize that we have a cement plant sitting on our doorstep. If the city tried, I bet it could buy cement at bargain prices from our good friends at Medusa in order to get the sidewalks project relling.

It is interesting to note that some of our best sidewalks today were laid more than a half-century ago. You see the name of the contractor and the date impressed in some of the flags. The builders must have been pretty proud of their work to leave their mark so conspicuously.

I'd also like to see the Shade Tree Commission re-activated post-haste. The two bad wind storms we had in April served to point up the fact the city's aging shade tree population is badly in need of intensive care.

Charlevoix – old Charlevoix – was built shortly after the timber barons moved out and the original settlers saw fit to plant the stately maples, beeches and birches that we enjoy today.

However, most of these trees are rapidly approaching the century mark and their heavy, aging branches are beginning to pose a serious threat not only to our electrical distribution system but also to anyone or anything that happens to be underneath when they decide to fall.

These trees, of course, must be replaced sooner or later. And the time to start is now – today – before we allow Mother Nature to take her toll in her own way.

The job doesn't have to be done overnight; in fact, gradual replacement will allow the city to retain its park-like atmosphere throughout the entire process.

Our forefathers had the foresight to plant our shade trees. We should have the good sense to take care of them.

Death by boredom

Even with research rats running interference for me, I don't know exactly when I'm going to die.

But I do know how. I'm going to die of boredom.

If they aren't discovering that kissing causes chipped fingernails and peanut butter hirings on embarrassing itching, they're putting a curse on my pizza and the volume on my car radio.

I can't enjoy anything anymore. In fact, I'm downright paranoid.

I go around feeling cans to see if they're bent, spitting on my finger to lick stamps, holding my breath around smokers, boiling my water and avoiding x-ray machines at the airport (my luggage doesn't look too good and I'm suspicious).

Lord knows I've tried to please everyone.

A few years ago when they put the finger on cigarettes, I quit smoking and turned to music for entertainment.

Someone said, "Cooped up in here all day listening to all those decibels will make you deaf."

I went to the beach.

Somcone said, "The water is polluted and the sun will cause skin cancer."

I decided to stay indoors and eat.

Someone said, "Tuna, fried foods, sugar, cereal products, meat and eggs are bad for you. You should have a check-up."

I went to the hospital for a check-up.

Someone said, "x-rays are bad for you and so is some of the medicine they're giving you."

I decided to drink.

Someone said, "That will destroy your liver."

So, I switched to coffee.

Someonc said "That is bad for you."

I went to soft drinks.

"The sugar is really harmful to yuur body," someone said.

I only drank drinks artificially flavored.

"That's bad for you," someone said.

"I'll eat snow."

"And drop dead?"

A friend of mine had a great idea for longevity. She bought a research rat and followed it around day and night. Everything it ate and survived, she tried. Everything it endured without damage, she went for.

Two days ago she called and said the rat died.

"What happened?" I asked.

"Got hit by a mousetrap a block from home."

"Tell me," I said wearily, "was it wearing lipstick? I have to know to know."

The great TV fight

WASHINGTDN – An enormous amount of quiet work has been done this session of Congress to rewrite the Communications Act of 1934, a law overtaken so many times by the rush of technology that it looks like a tomtom drum posed against a communications satellite.

The final shaping of the new act will take place in the House and Senate within a few weeks. Waiting anxiously are corporate powerhouses like the three major TV networks, Hollywood filmmakers, American Telephone & Telegraph and International Telephone & Telegraph, as well as the booming, but still budding, cable television industry.

What's at stake here are billions of dollars, the very structure of the TV industry, the Fairness Doctrine and the collective taste and intelligence of the American population, if not our sanity as well.

An eminent Son of the South is trying to arrange a rational approach to the national obsession called television. He is Sen Ernest "Fritz" Hollings (D-S.C.), chairman of the Senate subcommittee caught in this great clash of power. He shakes his head and says:

"I don't see how we can work up consensus yet. Everybody's got the power to kill off everybody else. I don't see how anybody can get anything passed. Let's see if we can get up enough public interest – not outrage – but enthusiasm and feeling that somcthing should be done in good legislation."

Most of us are content to think that in cities of size there are TV towers which shoot the stuff from the networks and major independents into our sets by VHF, and other towers giving us a few more choices by UHF. We turn that set on like a faucet.

TV aficionados, however, know that there are satellites out there sending TV programming to 350 earth stations for transmission by cable networks; that one Ted Turner (owner of the Atlanta Braves) bought himself an earth station from RCA for $750,000 to send programs to cable networks in 27 states; that Home Box Office Co. (Time, Inc.) now has 500 cable system affiliates in 47 states; that the video-cassette recorder business booms in sales and in future possibilities; and that when Bell Laboratories or other developers perfect the optical fiber, it can fold into a telephone line and give people 100 or more choices in TV viewing at one time.

The economic potential of this mind-boggling technology is so great that AT&T and IT&T naturally are quite interested. NBC, CBS and ABC, worried that cable TV could become so big that it would drastically shrink their network, and thus their enormous profits, are sweating all over, and so Hollywood which feeds programming to the networks.

The cable system began as a means of bringing TV to areas where reception was difficult or nonexistent. Cable operators simply picked up broadcast signals from TV stations and piped them into homes. Under an agreement of 1976 the operators were to pay the program copyrighters for this use. But cable has grown so fast (more than 4,000 systems) that Hollywood producers are now asking that the use of each program via cable TV system be negotiated before being broadcast. Thus, even a medium-sized station of eight channels broadcasting 80 programs a week would have to negotiate 640 contracts a week.

The cable people claim that this change, involving "retransmission rights," could force them out of business because the producers – tied to the big network – would still and make life difficult. The procedures, through Jack Valenti, president of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, claim they are only seeking a "fair market price" for a product they say cable is now paying less for than their postage stamps.

"Jack Valenti and others come up here calling the present system a 'congressional ripoff,'" Sen. Hollings said. "The fact is Congress was an innocent bystander to this fight of the giants. It's amusing to sit here and listen to everybody telling how rich everybody else is. One says the broadcasters make 'x' million, and another says cable is getting fat off others.

"The larger issue, the one we should be interested in, is diversity. It serves as a cleanser, censor and quality improver. It behooves us to get a multiplicity of voices. Cable TV is a tremendous tonic for that, no doubt about it."

The cable operators love that kind of talk. They claim that the day isn't far off when there will be 100 channels and thus no more mass marketing mediocrity by network TV and Hollywood. They point to the two cable channels devoted exclusively to children's programming without commercials; and to channels developing for the elderly, blacks, intellectuals, sports fans, ethnics, women, Hispanics and a variety of tastes in music, the performing arts and film. The people can even have porno, if they want it, providing it comes by scrambled signal into a box for which only Daddy has the key so the kiddies can't watch. (But what if junior steals the key?)

"We are not out to get the TV boys," Hollings says. "They're doing a good job. We're not trying to hold back the cable boys, either. There has to be give and take. After all, the airways are a public resource."

This cluster of issues, the billions involved, and what comes out of that box in the living room are what concern Hollings and, equally Rep. Lionel Van Deerlin (D-Calif.), chairman of the house committee holding hearings on the new act.

The thought crosses my mind that there is no built-in virtue in cable TV, though with 100 or more channels, it could be a blessing in variety. Then the thought crosses my mind that if TV programming really does become good, we could become a nation of all-night eyeballs for which all the Murine and Visine will have no cure and the book, magazine and newspaper business might perish from this earth. If that is the prospect, I am willing to join volunteers who would blow up all TV towers in the Republic.

County gets $ for marine safety

All the counties in the 106th District will receive a total of more than $66,000 from the State Department of Natural Resources (DNR) as reimbursement for Marine Safety Programs they conducted last year, State Representative Steve Andrews (R-Wolverine) announced today.

The counties will receive rebates for conducting the programs in 1978, in the follnwing amounts:

Alpena	$4,928.86
Antrim	11,015.00
Charlevoix	11,417.46
Cheboygan	22,164.90
Montmorency	4,593.75
Otsego	3,366.14
Presque Isle	8,628.62
	$66,114.73

"I am pleased that all of the counties I represent chose to participate in Marine Safety Programs last year," Andrews said. "I believe it represents a responsible approach on their part to 'safety first' in recreational activities."

Andrews said the rebates represent two-thirds of the money it cost the counties to run the safety programs last year. He added that county treasurers or other designated officials will receive these funds by June 15.

First step of Medusa's conversion program completed

Medusa's new gravel bed filter system which replaces the clinker cooler baghouse is the $50 million conversion program's first operational equipment to go on-line. Built and installed at a cost exceeding $2 million, the new gravel bed filter system consisting of 18 cyclone/filter bed modules is designed to remove dust from the clinker cooling process "well within EPA and DNR requirements," Medusa officials say.

The system does not use bags or water. According to officials, filter replacement, clogging or blinding is never a problem. After the hot dust-laden kiln gases are cooled and thoroughly cleaned through filter beds of scientifically selected, placed and sized quartz gravel, the clean air is emitted from the stack pictured above. When the filter beds become coated with dust, the system is backflushed sequentially with clean air. Only one filter module is cleaned at a time. In addition to the airflush, the filter beds are automatically raked.

NOTICE TO BIDDERS

The Charlevoix County Road Commission will receive sealed proposals at their offices at 1051 E. Division, Boyne City, Michigan 49712, until 10:00 A.M. Monday, July 9, 1979, for furnishing 1979 requirements of Aggregate Production.

Further information and specification may be obtained at the Commission offices.

All proposals must be in sealed envelopes, plainly marked as to the item bid upon and the name of the bidder.

The Charlevoix County Road Commission reserves the right to waive the irregularity of any bid, or to reject any or all bids or to split the award by items, or to make the award in whole or in part, as may be deemed to be in its own interest.

Do Business Where Business Is Being Done

Waldner wants 36 counties to form state of Superior

By Peg Ohle

Don't be surprised if your representative on the Charlevoix County Board of Commissioners asks you if you would like to vote on the question of withdrawing from the State of Michigan to join the "Independent State of Superior".

Karl Waldner of Boyne City, who calls himself the "provisional counselor" of this "new emerging state" last week asked the board of commissioners to consider putting the proposition on the ballot in a special election next fall.

However, the board felt it needed time to determine how voters throughout the county feel about bringing the question to a vote.

The question, as Waldner sees it, is "Shall the 36 northernmost counties of Michigan separate therefrom and become the Independent State of Superior?"

Karl Waldner

He and his cohorts are contacting the boards of commissioners in the 36 counties, making the same request. In a letter addressed to local lawmakers, Waldner states:

"Each resolution should request the Michigan Legislature that it pass a bill authorizing a special election this fall (on the question) and grant its consent if the results show a majority approval.

"Certainly not one county board of commissioners, nor the honorable state legislators would want to be accused of denying their constituents the right to vote. By either spurious delay or outright refusal to draft a resolution or authorize a bill."

He further pointed out to the board of commissioners that the Federal Constitution provides for such a separation move by a portion of an established state.

A long time critic of the tax system, Waldner sees the creation of the new state as a solution to many "evils":

"The new emerging states democratic-financial make-up will eliminate the need of property, single business, state sales and income, and inheritance taxes. A municipal area income tax, based on ability to pay, will be substituted along with reduced basic use fees which will cover true expenses.

"We will work for a constitution with strong local voter controls. A reverse of present trends. Expanded geographic municipal service areas would cut much out of county government. A very major saving is a minor part-time, local voter controlled ISS state function."

In an apparent contradiction of financial benefits of creating the Independent State of Superior, Waldner points out that "On every dollar sent south to Lansing an estimated $1.80 goes back north."

He also pointed out the economic superiority of the 47 southernmost counties.

Now, maybe you will know what your County Commissioner is talking about if he asks your opinion on a vote to join the Independent State of Superior.

Where are the best fishing spots? Avid sport fisherman knows

By Peg Ohle

Bob Riggle is one of Charlevoix' most avid fishermen. Now some of his expertise is recorded in a book titled "Trout-Salmon Fishing Guide", in which he tells where and how to fish in the Charlevoix area. This week he tells the Courier how it all came about.

COURIER: How long have you lived in Charlevoix?

RIGGLE: We came here in 1972 from Grand Rapids. I worked for the telephone company 33 years in Lansing and three years in Grand Rapids.

COURIER: Had you known Charlevoix before you moved up here?

RIGGLE: Oh, yes, we were married here. My wife is the former Mary Helen Fochtman, brother of Dick and Bill. We were married in the house at 409 Dixon on June 24, 1939.

COURIER: Did you do much fishing before you moved up here?

RIGGLE: Just in streams and small lakes. Dick Fochtman and Myrl Keller taught me a lot about fishing in Lake Michigan.

COURIER: Do you fish year 'round?

RIGGLE: Yes, but I didn't catch any through the ice this winter.

COURIER: What is your favorite fishing month?

RIGGLE: July is best for productivity. The lake trout get into the Bay then. They seem to start at Norwood and work their way north. My theory is that they winter in 600 feet of water in Grand Traverse Bay. They like it about 50 to 55 degrees.

COURIER: How is lake trout fishing this year?

RIGGLE: So far I've caught 77 lake trout compared with 115 the same time this year. There's just not as many.

COURIER: What do you do with what you catch?

RIGGLE: Give them away. I've given fish to 35 different people this year. We probably don't have three fish in the freezer right now. We serve a lot to our guests. Last year, we had 27 people at Young State Park and served them all fish.

COURIER: What kind of a boat do you have?

RIGGLE: A 26 foot Chris Craft Sea Skip. It's a pleasure cruiser but does a good job of fishing. There's lots of deck space.

COURIER: How did you happen to write the section on Charlevoix in the Trout Fishing book?

RIGGLE: I met the authors through Myrl Keller, they're Canadians. The book covers fishing areas all along the eastern side Lake Michigan, all of Lake Huron, Georgian Bay, and Lake Ontario. The authors have three or four research boats which they trailer around the area and talk to local fishermen.

COURIER: Your section on Charlevoix has a description of 11 "hotspots" and a map showing where they are.

RIGGLE: Yes, and it should really be helpful to fishermen. In the back of the book there's also a list of local character boat operators.

COURIER: There's also quite a bit of general fishing information in the book, too, isn't there?

RIGGLE: Yes, on all kinds of subjects - - lures and baits and other fishing aids, the sciences of fishing, what to do with fish after it's caught, boats and motors and trailers, boating safety, and lots of other information.

COURIER: Is the book available in town?

RIGGLE: It will be soon. Anyone wanting one can also order by mail to Ontario Outdoor Publications, Box 1414, Kitchener, Ontario. It's $7.95 postpaid.

COURIER: Do you have time for hobbies other than fishing?

RIGGLE: Oh, yes, I only fish two or three times a week. Dick and I have a 300 ft. by 80 ft. garden south of town, so that keeps me busy in the summer.

COURIER: Do you and Mary Helen have a family?

RIGGLE: Three boys, two married and one single. Jim practices law in Mt. Clemens, John has a doctor's degree in plant pathology and lives in Grand Rapids, and Tom works for American Honda in Traverse City. They're all grads of MSU. We also have three grandchildren.

Meet Charlevoix

Cows bring hefty prices

Two farm families from the Charlevoix area figure they did well at the District VII Invitational Registered Holstein sale held recently in Evart.

Mr. and Mrs. Doug Warner sold a yearling named Dou-Mar Willow Paula for $2,700 and Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Nemecek sold a five-month-old calf for $800.

The Warners are proprietors of the Dou-Mar Dairy Farm at Norwood and the Nemeceks own the La-Sans Dairy Farm at East Jordan.

The sale marked the first time either family was invited to participate.

Mrs. Nemecek says a total of 58 animals were sold, with gross sales coming to $122,750. The top cow sold for $6,000.

Many hours of tender, loving care are required to get the animals ready for the auction block, Mrs. Nemecek says. The preparations includes bathing, clipping and breaking to lead.

"This sale is an excellent opportunity for Registered Holstein owners to make money from more than just the sale of milk," Mrs. Nemecek says. She added that many of the calves sold became project animals for 4-H youngsters.

In addition to the Norwood and East Jordan entries, Glenn Rubingh of Ellsworth sold a two-year-old bred heifer for $1,700.

The Nemeceks also were numbered among the buyers at the Evart sale. They came home with a two-year-old bred heifer, Lily Pond Happy Lilac, whose dam has a milk record as a four year old of 19,332 pounds of milk in a single year. Lilac is bred to Glen Valley Star and is due to freshen in July.

Questions and Answers for Brides-To-Be...

MARK NOROBERG

Q. In a church wedding, which side is usually reserved for the bride's family and friends?
A. The left. The groom's is the right side. (In some synagogues this is reversed.)

Q. What if a church has two center aisles?
A. Pick one aisle and run the whole wedding as though it were the only one, or use the right hand aisle for the processional and the left for the recessional.

Q. May any feminine member of the wedding party wear black?
A. No.

Q. Are divorced parents of the bride seated together in church?
A. No. The mother keeps her front-row seat with her new husband if she's remarried. The father sits in the third left-hand pew.

Q. What is the church seating if the groom's parents are divorced?
A. His mother sits in the front right-hand pew, the father in the third.

Q. Does the groom always kiss the bride at the altar?
A. The clergyman will rule on it according to church practice.

Q. Who gives the clergyman his fee?
A. The groom pays, but the best man hands it over in a plain white envelope before or after the ceremony.

Q. Is the clergyman invited to the reception?
A. Yes, with his wife. He sits at the parent's table.

County employees get more mileage money

The increased costs of gasoline were recognized by the Charlevoix County Board of Commissioners last week when they raised mileage allowances of employees.

Department heads and employees utilizing their personal vehicles in the course of performing required jobs such as field work and inspections will receive 25 cents a mile.

Department heads, elected officials, and employees utilizing their personal vehicles in traveling to meetings, seminars, conventions, etc. will receive 20 cents a mile.

The allowances had previously been 17 cents a mile.

Island to get increased police protection

Beaver Island will have increased police protection this summer as the result of action taken by the Charlevoix County Board of Commissioners last week.

Sheriff's Deputy Welke, who usually works on a part-time basis, will be a full-time employee for the months of June, July, and August.

A "retired patrol unit" will be placed on duty, with expenses paid for by the Sheriff's Secondary Road Patrol Unit.

Overtime funds for the additional help on the Island will also come from the Sheriff's Secondary Road Patrol Bill.

Hospital installs second fetal monitor thanks to Charlevoix March of Dimes

Thanks to the Charlevoix County March of Dimes, Charlevoix Area Hospital has installed a second fetal monitor in its obstetrical unit.

Fetal monitors, which are used to observe the heart rate of infants before they are born, during labor, are an important means of diagnosing potential problems for the infants during and after birth.

Fetal monitors play an important role in the prevention of birth defects, which is the reason for the March of Dimes was anxious to help Charlevoix Area Hospital obtain its second machine.

"We felt it was necessary to have two fetal monitors for such occasions as when two mothers are in labor or if a back up machine is needed," Richard Krueger explained as he and Kay Chase, executive director of Northern Michigan Chapter of the March of Dimes looked over the new monitor.

Mrs. Chase explained that the fetal monitors can tell a doctor if something is going wrong before birth. "For example," she said, "it can monitor heart rate of the unborn and the contions of the mother and indicate if the child is receiving adequate oxygen.

"If the mother indicates a problem it helps the doctor determine the best method of delivery and whether the mother should receive medication to slow down her labor."

The new monitor, which cost $4895, is part of the continuing close cooperation between the March of Dimes and Charlevoix Area Hospital.

"Charlevoix March of Dimes has been instrumental in providing many dollars toward health care at this hospital," Krueger said.

Mrs. Chase added, "We are very proud of Charlevoix Area Hospital and what we've been able to do over the years here."

In addition to the two fetal monitors, which March of Dimes enabled the hospital to acquire, March of Dimes has helped Charlevoix Area Hospital obtain an infant intensive care unit for the delivery room, an infant radiant heater, for the nursery, and a dappler stethescope – an instrument which amplifies the unborn infant's heart beat.

March of Dimes also encourages nurses working in pediatrics and obstetrics to stay abreast in their fields, by paying fees for nurses to attend special training sessions, and purchasing educational material in the form of modulars of books, tapes and pamphlets on subjects such as birth, infant hyoglycemia and other subjects relevant to the prevention of birth defects.

March of Dimes in Charlevoix County also assists children who have birth defect related problems obtain therapy and special equipment when necessary. And the organization pays the costs of Rhogam shots for mothers who have RH negative blood, if the shots are not covered by insurance. These shots are a means a preventing RH related problems in future deliveries.

Mrs. Chase said the cooperative work between March of Dimes and Charlevoix Area Hospital involves a multitude of small things, as well.

"The staff of the March of Dimes and the nurses at Charlevoix Area Hospital have a particularly good relationship," she observed.

The March of Dimes 1979 campaign against birth defects begins June 19, with a special two day campaign supported by Charlevoix Kentucky Fried Chicken scheduled for June 30 and July 1, when 50 cents will be given to the March of Dimes for every bucket or barrel of chicken sold.

I wish to thank my supporters in the recent Charlevoix School Board Election. I will do my best to earn your continued support.

Reading Bloodline? Buy a night lite

Here's a whodunit for the murder mystery set guaranteed to send chills down the spine. I seldom choose a novel of this sort, because I'm the type who still needs to sleep with a night lite plugged in. Also, I feel incompetent never having won a game of "Clue". If it was Mrs. Peacock in the Conservatory with a candlestick, I'm usually sure it was Professor Plum with a lead pipe. Not to tarnish the record I failed again. Sidney Sheldon, author of Bloodline, must be in cahoots with the Clue Co. Either that or I'll never make it as a detective.

Instead of rooms, for your prucess of elimination pleasure, there are countries in Bloodline, four countries represented by four family board members of the pharmaceutical giant Roffe and Sons. Each of these gentlemen is "family" by marriage. The fifth member and president of the company, the last male in the Roffe and Sons lineage, has just been conveniently done in as we enter upon the game board.

Just for fun, we are allowed an intimate glimpse into the personal life situations of all four remaining board members and discover that every one has an overwhelming motive for murder. The company has never gone public, therefore all stock is in financial limbo. Despite their formidible salaries and life styles, each board member is desperately in need of money, money that can be theirs only if the opposition towards going public can be eliminated.

Now comes the catch. Sam Roffe has willed the company to his daughter and only heir, Elizabeth. Rather than giving in gracefully, Elizabeth chooses to du her part for family tradition, and instead hold tight to the presidential reins. Always in the background is one more shadow to wonder about. Rhys Williams, not a family member or board member, but Sam's partner and confidant of sorts over the years. Could young, handsome, ambitious Rhys Williams possibly have a motive for murder. Of course. Couldn't he just worry Elizabeth and take over gracefully? But would he? Could he be capable of deceiving Sam and Elizabeth all those years just waiting for this golden opportunity?

Could he? Would they? And who has been placing the Company's good name in jeopardy over the last few years. Sam knew some one of this closest associates was sabotaging Roffe and Sons, and he was murdered for this knowledge. Elizabeth knows and promises to be next on the list. But if you can't trust family, who can you trust?

All live suspects have excellent motives for murder. The heroine is beautiful, capable and determined. The detective who cracks the cuse is as shrewd and ungainly as Columbo. The plot is cliche, the characters are stereotyped, but the narrative has something that keeps the reader turning page after page despite the programming. Bloodline is one of those books you will start reading one day and polish off the next. I would suggest investing in a night lite if you plan to pick it up.

Survivor of plane crash guest at Assembly of God Wednesday

Norman Williams, one of the 60 survivors of the terrible Canary Island's crash which claimed more than 600 lives early last year, will be the guest speaker at the Charlevoix Assembly of God on June 20, Wednesday, evening at 7:30 p.m.

Williams is a co-author of the book called, "Terror at Tenerife" which details the international tragedy. He also relates his experience to audiences from coast to coast.

Before the accident, Williams described himself as a "complacent Christian" who put his business of 20 years first in his life. He is president of the California College of Commerce. Now he says, "Serving God in Number One".

Williams remembers many of the details of the crash. He recalls the passengers, most of them fellow Californians, singing and applauding in relief when the signal to begin taxing for takeoff was finally given after they had waited in the plane for four hours. He felt the plane take a sharp turn and realized something was wrong!

Huckles host photography program

The public is invited to share in a "Yesterday's Photography – Today's Collectibles" program at East Jordan's Portside Art and Historical Museum at 7:30 p.m., June 21, at Elm Point in East Jordan.

"We are encouraging those who can do so, to bring along a family owned, historic photo image about which they may have questions. If we can help date them, we will.", said Bill and Doris Huckle, who will conduct the program.

The Huckles' will show some of the earliest types of photo images including daquerreotypes, ambrotypes and tintypes. Also un display will be some turn-of-the-century cameras used by former area photographers and some examples of their work.

They represent some of the photographers mentioned in "Artists North", a book researched and authored by Doris Huckle which lists artists, craftsmen and photographers in Antrim, Emmet and Charlevoix counties from 1850-1950.

MICHIGAN BELL CONSUMER TIPS

Your children could save a life, with a little help from you and your telephone.

Michigan Bell

If you have children at home, would they know who to call in case of a fire, accident or sudden illness? Be sure you have listed near your phone the numbers of your doctor, hospital, poison control, police, fire department and other emergency numbers. Show your children how to find those numbers, how to dial them (if they don't already know), how to call the operator, let them know if 911 can be dialed for fire, medical or police help in your area. Write down your home address near these numbers, too, so your children or your baby-sitter can give it to people who need to find your home in a hurry. (But, for safety's sake, you should instruct them not to give your address or other information to strangers on the phone.) Your telephone can be a lifesaving help in an emergency. Teach your children how to use it for their protection and yours.

Michigan Bell . . . people who enjoy serving people.

Patriarch of the family is Henry Potter nearing his 90th birthday, retired farmer; his only son, Archie; the latter's only son, James and his only child, Jacob Michael, 10 months old. Archie, 50, and son, James, 26, have followed in the footsteps of the elder Potter, working as farmers on land that has been in the family since the senior member of the group first began farming. They are all hopeful that young Jacob, when he reaches adulthood will also be a farmer.

Archie and his son, James, operate a large dairy farm on which they also raise pigs and the crops to feed the animals.

The Potter ancestors first came to the Barnard area more than a century ago.

Motivated student makes tent

If mutivation is the key to learning, then Aaron Whitley learned a lot in Vera Rimbold's home economics class this past year.

While most students were busy working on coats, vests and backpacks, Whitley was putting together a tent.

"This is the first time I can recall someone in class making a large tent," Ms. Rimbold said. "But Aaron plans un camping this summer so he did have some motivatron."

According to Ms. Rimbold, Whitley purchased a four man Frostline tent kit.

"The Frostline kits are pretty expensive (over $100)," she said. "I was worried because Aaron - up until now - had not made too many things.

"And like all students in the class he is a beginning sewer."

But, as it turned out, Ms Rimbold had nothing to worry about.

"He worked non-stop on that tent," she said. "He probably saved over $100 by putting that tent together himself.

"Next year he plans on making a sleeping bag. Slowly he'll have all the camping equipment he needs."

Earlier in the school year another of Ms Rimbold's students, Steve Landon, made something unique - a three piece business surt.

"That was really sharp," she said, "Steve wore it to the prom and graduatiun."

Students are required to complete twu projects in the corrse. After each project, the students self-evaluate their work - noting errors in the project or problems encountered while working on the project. They are then graded by the teacher.

Variety store now open

The Charlevoix Variety and Sewing Center in the Oleson's Shopping Center is open for business. In fact, the variety store is still celebrating its grand opening today (Wednesday) with several items on sale.

"We're offering good quality at good prices," says Marilyn Aull, owner of the store.

Mrs. Aull likes to think of her store as a "mini-department" store. And for good reason. The store has a wide varrety of stock - from cards to plants to toys to candles to school supplies to car supplies to clothes tu kitchen supplies and, of course, to sewing supplies.

"It's the only store of its kind in the downtown area," Mrs. Aull says.

Mrs. Aull and her husband, Richard, purchased the store from Oleson's just over a month ago.

"We've got a new staff, new merchandise and a new look," Mrs. Aull says.

The store just received a shipment of over 2,000 items.

Mrs. Aull says that she plans to build up the ready to wear section in the future. And until fall, she says, only the downstairs will be open. She adds that part of the upstairs might be utilized as a toyland at Christmas time.

The Charlevoix Variety and Sewing Center will be open from 9:30 a.m. until 5:30 p.m. Monday through Saturday - except Friday when the store is open until 8:30 p.m.

Charlevoix: 100 years ago

On June 16, 1879, when the Charlevoix Village Council met for its regular meeting, the dangers of fire were apparently uppermost in the minds of the Trustees, judging from the following resolutions they passed:

"It shall be unlawful for the owner or occupant of any dwelling house, store, shed, or other building within the Village of Charlevoix to use or permit to be used any stove, furnace, or other apparatus for heating, cooking, or manufacturing purposes within said dwelling house, store, shed, or other building unless the same be connected by a proper pipe to a brick chimney extending three feet above the roof of said building, and not less than two feet below the roof or one and one-half feet below the ceiling of the room in which said chimney is constructed."

"It shall be unlawful for any person or persons to deposit or permit to be deposited any wood or coal ashes in any box or basket or barrel or other wooden receptacle within fifty feet of any dwelling, house, store, shed, or other building within the Village of Charlevoix."

One hundred years agu, on June 2, 1879, the fledgling Charlevoix Village Council met to consider many important matters of the day. Among the motions passed by the trustees were:

"Any person who shall knowingly and maliciously raise a false alarm of fire within the Village of Charlevoix shall be punished by a fine exceeding five dollars and costs of prosecution."

"Any person owning or having in charge any horse, wagon, cart, sleigh, or other vehicle who shall allow the same to remain on any sidewalk or crosswalk in the Village of Charlevoix shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five dollars for each offence and costs of prosecution."

"Any person who shall beat or use any animal or other creature in a cruel or inhumane manner within the Village of Charlevoix shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five dollars for each offence and costs of prosecution."

"Any person who shall build or use or cause to be used any slaughter house within the Village of Charlevoix without the permission of the Village Council of said Village shall be punished by a fine not exceeding fifty dollars and costs of prosecution."

Wedding

Hufford - Phillips

Arrangements of pink carnations and white pompoms graced the altar of the First Congregational Church for the mid-morning wedding of Sandra J. Hufford of Charlevoix and John F. Phillips of Harper Woods on Saturday.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Walter J. Hufford of Charlevoix and Mr. and Mrs. George Phillips of Harper Woods.

The Rev. Raymond Giffin officiated at the double ring service in the presence of 200 guests. Mrs. Charles Bellinger was the organist and Vincent Chew the soloist.

The bride, escorted to the altar by her father, chose a gown of Viennese lace and organza for her wedding. The scalloped lace edged the deep V-front and back neckline and the short sleeves of the fitted lace bodice. The full skirt of organza over taffeta featured a chapel length train and wide flounce at the hemline which fell from an insert of the same lace. A Juliet cap secured her waltz length veil of bridal illusion trimmed with Viennese lace. She carried a bridal bouquet of gardenias and pastel pink roses.

Tina Cummings of Harbor Springs served as maid of honor and Linda Hufford, sister of the bride, and Allison Townsend of Oak Park, Ill., as bridesmaids. They wore identical gowns of pink floral border print chiffon over taffeta with spaghetti straps and matching shawls. Their colorful bouquets were of pink carnations.

Karen Hufford, sister of the bride, as flower girl, wore a full length pink rosebud print lawn gown over pink polyester and carried a basket of rose petals.

Roy C. Martin assisted the bridegroom as best man. John Fagan of East Lansing and David Folger of Richmond, Va., were groomsmen. Will Deeley of Lexington, Va., and Steve Hufford, brother of the bride, seated the guests.

Mrs. Hufford selected a deep pink full length gown of chiffon over taffeta fashioned with a lace cummerbund for her daughter's wedding. Mrs. Phillips, mother of the bridegroom, wore a full length dusty blue chiffon gown styled with a pleated skirt and cope collar.

A wedding dinner reception, hosted by the bride's parents, followed at Stafford's Bay View Inn. Sporney's Band played for dancing.

After a wedding trip to the Grand Hotel on Mackinac Island, the couple will be at home after June 25 at Alanson.

The bride is a recent graduate of Michigan State University and will be serving an internship in Medical Technology at Little Traverse Hospital in Petoskey. Phillips is a graduate of Washington & Lee University and will be with the Accounting Department of Control Engineering.

A rehearsal dinner at Duffy's of Charlevoix was hosted by the bridegroom's parents Friday evening.

Charlevoix sites illustrated in book

When you think of Charlevoix what comes to mind?

Is it the Venetian Festival? The Waterfront Art Fair? The Belvedere or Chicago Clubs? The drawbridge? The concerts in East Park? The Sundew or the Beaver Islander? Greensky Hill?

All of these events and places are a part of Charlevoix's colorful image.

At least Cara Hochhalter thinks so.

Cara is the author-artist of "The Charlevoix Coloring Book." The 24 page booklet includes a brief history of "how Charlevoix came to be" and 22 "simple" illustrations of Charlevoix.

"I tried to keep it simple because it's a coloring book," Cara explained. "There is not a lot of detail in it.

"But I think it's nice because kids can use the book and learn to appreciate the area."

The impetus for "The Charlevoix Coloring Book" actually came from Cara's sister, Susan Pietsch, who had done a coloring book for a west coast town.

"After I saw her book, I thought it would be neat to do one of Charlevoix," Cara said.

The project took almost a year to complete. Cara started last summer by collecting photographs of the area. After studying the photographs, she started the drawings ("the toughest part of the job.").By spring the drawings were completed and ready to be sent to the printer.

The book is published by Jingeville Creations. And there's a story behind that, too. Cara and her husband, Jeff, reside in an old logging community that was known as Jingleville ("Named after the jingle, jangle noise of the horse bells," Cara says.).

The Hochhalters have lived in the Charlevoix area three years, but Cara is not a newcomer to the area. Her father, Vernon Bobbitt, frequently summered in Bay View teaching art through Albion College.

Cara has also gone into teaching. During this past school year she was a teacher's aide at the Charlevoix Elementary School. Prior to that she taught English in South America - through the Peace Corps - and it was in South America where she met Jeff.

"The Charlevoix Coloring Book" is on sale at the Appletree and at Literary News.

Independent truckers protest regulations

By Peg Ohle

Independent truck drivers John and Larry Moeschke are on an "extended vacation."

For how long? Well, according to John Moeschke, that's up to the government.

Normally, the father and son team haul print paper from Muskegon to California and then return with farm produce that goes to a wholesale firm in Grand Rapids.

But these are not normal times.

"We are on vacation because we don't like the violence on the highways," John said from his Horton Bay home Friday. "We don't want to get shot up."

There is no question that the Moeschke's are facing the same problems that have caused other independent truckers to picket and even prevent trucks from using the highways.

Like other independent truckers, the Moeschke's want 1) all states to permit loads of up to 80,000 pounds 2) truckers to receive fuel allotments and 3) financial relief to make up for the increase in fuel prices.

John and Larry have been hauling for five years. When they started in the business, diesel fuel cost 46 cents a gallon. Now it averages 86 cents, and sometimes it's hard to get.

On a recent trip along US 80, they found themselves rationed to 50 gallons in Wyoming and some shortages in Iowa and Nebraska.

"You get off the highway at an interseetion where there's a gas station, drive two or three miles to it, then find out they're out of fuel," John complains.

"Getting on and off the highway costs us fuel and time, too."

The two tanks on the Mocschke rig hold 120 gallons each, and they get five miles to the gallon. The round-trip to the West Coast takes about 800 gallons, which cost around $688.

Load limits are another problem. Most states permit up to 80,000 pounds. But on the run from Michigan to the West Coast, the route goes through Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, where the limit is 73,280 pounds, which means that is the maximum the Moeschke's can carry to California and return.

"It takes the same amount of fuel to carry 73,280 pounds as it does to carry 80,000 pounds, and we have to pay for it," John laments.

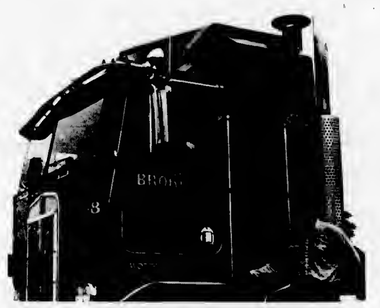
The tractor-trailer rig with a refrigeration unit cost over $80,000 last year, which means $1,600 in monthly payments. Insurance amounts to between $5,000 and $6,000 a year. Then there are the innumerable state permits and licenses.

Federal and state laws governing the trucking industry seem impossible to comprehend as John recites some of them:

"We have to buy fuel at least once in every state we cross on a round trip.

"In California, we have to hire people to do the unloading, even paying their social security.

"Because of regulations, we often have to travel hundreds of miles empty between one unloading and another pickup. The rules about what we can carry and can't carry at any time don't make sense. It doesn't seem to make any difference that a truck engine will burn fuel at almost the same rate loaded or empty.



John and Larry Moeschke

"In New Mexico, we have to pay a tax of five cents on every gallon of fuel we have in our tanks when we enter the state.

"In Wyoming, we don't pay a fuel tax when we get the fuel. We have to keep records and pay the tax quarterly."

Records. John has piles of records – white papers, blue papers, yellow papers, pink papers, full of mileage figures, tax figures, load figures, cost figures, all unintelligible to the non-trucker.

How does he learn about all the rules and regulations?

"Some you don't learn about until you get fined, then you remember," he says.

John believes that no industry is as regulated as the trucking industry.

"Our freight rates – what we can charge for our work – are also regulated and they haven't been raised in two years despite our increased costs," he explains.

To illustrate that it's not the trucker at fault lor rising food costs, John gives this example:

"We picked up a load of string beans and were paid 75 cents a bushel. The wholesaler we delivered them to turned around and sold them for $15 a bushel."

The life of a truck driver is not an easy one, if the Moeschke's are typical.

"We can make the trip from Michigan to California and back ... days if we are loaded and unlo... same day," John says.

"We sleep in the cab. One dr... one sleeps. Because there are t... we're better off than a single ... who has to take time off to sle... the 55 miles a hour speed limit. ... a lot."

To illustrate what this loss o... John displays a chart indicatin... a trucker could drive at 65 m... hour, he could rive 3,000 mil... hours' less time than with the ... limit.

The lighthouse is expected to get a coat of fresh paint in the not so distant future, according to city officials. Officials say the work will be done by the Coast Guard.

Merchants warned about taking 'gamble'; caution urged when cashing checks

"When you're cashing a check get some identification," Police Chief Jack Mol said. "And by identification I don't mean a social security number.

"Get the driver's license number. If there is no driver's license, then you're gambling."

And area law enforcement agents do not want merchants to "gamble" when it comes time to cash a check.

How can a cashier reduce the risk of cashing a bad check? The following pointers were offered at check cashing seminar sponsored recently by the Charlevoix County State Bank:

Make certain the check is encoded with routing numbers.

Always examine the date.

The amount written in words should agree with the amount written in figures.

Record the casher's address, phone, and two types of identification on the back side of the check.

Be certain the check is signed, and the signature corresponds with identification offered.

Qualify each identification card by asking yourself: How much effort would it require to obtain such identification? Does the identification correspond with the person's appearance? Has it the quality of being genuine and unaltered?

Checks presented by persons other than the originator, are two party checks, which require special handling as outlined below.

Avoid cashing checks outside your trading area.

For new customers, it is advisable to limit the first check to the amount of the purchase or the cost of services.

Do not accept checks altered in any manner and never cash or accept checks written in pencil.

After cashing check, initial it. Then endorse the check with your company's stamp "For Deposit Only." This remark prevents the re-cashing of the check if lost or stolen.

For any check presented by a person other than the originator, make certain the check is endorsed in your presence exactly as shown on the face of the check.

If you do receive a bad check, the normal procedure is to contact the police so a five day notice can be sent out. If no word is received from the person who cashed that bad check within the five days, then you can sign a check violation form and the police department will start an investigation.

But merchants should be warned.

"Check investigations are expensive and time consuming," said Mol. "And to do that for a $9 check - no matter how upsetting it is - might not be a high priority."

If the merchant decides to prosecute, identification of the suspect is a must.

"There are two problems that make it difficult to prosecute," said Scott Beatty, Charlevoix County prosecutor.

"First, the statues require that the prosecution prove there was intent to defraud. This is difficult. You have to prove the defendant was deliberately trying to injure the shopkeeper. Now if the defendant is sent a five day notice and doesn't pay within five days then that's primafacie evidence and the prosecution has something to go on. But you have to prove the defendant got the notice. Many times notices are not collected. It's best to send by registered mail.

Second, you have to prove that it was, in fact, John Doe who was the person who passed the bad check. This is hard because several people are in a store during a day and several write checks. I can't prosecute or the court convict without positive identification."

If convicted, however, penalties range from 90 days in jail (non-sufficient check under $50) to 14 years in jail (forgery and uttering and publishing).

Beatty added that not every bad check case could be prosecuted. He said, for example, that it would not be financially feasible to extradite a suspect from California over a bad check for a small amount.

Beatty said that more and more counterfeit checks are being cashed in northern Michigan. And people who buy the counterfeit checks are "professional looking...some are good looking.

Beatty said that more and more counterfeit checks are being cashed in northern Michigan. He said people buying and cashing the counterfeit checks are "professional looking...some are good looking women who dress provocatively...they are experts in what they do...you can't judge by appearance."

One woman, Penny Bond, ... over $70,000 in bad checks bef... was caught, Beatty said.

"My advice to you (mer... would be to establish a check ... and follow it verbatim. Tighten ... procedures. You'll still cash ... check here and there but it will ... loses."

Beatty also recommended ... businesses lock up checks after ... since checks are sometimes a p... item in a breaking and entering.

A site for housing project?

It took the Charlevoix Housing Commission five years to obtain funds for elderly housing in Charlevoix and now that funds have been secured, the commission is moving rapidly to make the 62 unit housing project a reality.

Ralph McRae, president of the commission, updated the Charlevoix City Council Monday on the commission's progress. McRae said the commission's top priorities are 1) to get a site approved for the project and 2) to select an architect to design it.

McRae said the commission has a proposed site for the project, but that they prefer to keep it silent until HUD determines if the site is acceptable. McRae said he hoped HUD officials would inspect the site in the next two weeks.

He also said the commission ... meeting Tuesday with three arch... McRae said five architects ... contacted, but two failed to re... Commission member Robert Coo... it is hoped an architect will be ... within two weeks.

Beatty added that not every bad check case could be prosecuted. He said, for example, that it would not be financially feasible to extradite a suspect from California over a bad check for a small amount.

Beatty said that more and more counterfeit checks are being cashed in northern Michigan. And people who buy the counterfeit checks are "professional looking...some are good looking.

Beatty said that more and more counterfeit checks are being cashed in northern Michigan. He said people buying and cashing the counterfeit checks are "professional looking...some are good looking women who dress provocatively...they are experts in what they do...you can't judge by appearance."

One woman, Penny Bond, cashed over $70,000 in bad checks before she was caught, Beatty said.

"My advice to you (merchants) would be to establish a check routine and follow it verbatim. Tighten up your procedures. You'll still cash a bad check here and there but it will cut your loses."

Beatty said the most effective deterent is to get a thumb print on the check.

"This will deter the pro," he said. "No way will a pro get his thumb print on a bad check. It will increase his risks as a professional theif."

"The only negative aspect about it is that it makes the customers feel like criminals."

Beatty also recommended that businesses lock up checks after hours since checks are sometimes a priority item in a breaking and entering.

A site for housing project?

It took the Charlevoix Housing Commission five years to obtain funds for elderly housing in Charlevoix and now that funds have been secured, the commission is moving rapidly to make the 62 unit housing project a reality.

Ralph McRae, president of the commission, updated the Charlevoix City Council Monday on the commission's progress. McRae said the commission's top priorities are 1) to get a site approved for the project and 2) to select an architect to design it.

McRae said the commission has a proposed site for the project, but that they prefer to keep it silent until HUD determines if the site is acceptable. McRae said he hoped HUD officials would inspect the site in the next two weeks.

He also said the commission will be meeting Tuesday with three architects. McRae said five architects were contacted, but two failed to respond. Commission member Robert Cook said it is hoped an architect will be hired within two weeks.

Pam Boss candidate for Cherry Queen, search is on for Venetian candidates

By Fran Martin

Charlevoix Venetian Queen, Pamela Boss, will represent the city in the annual National Cherry Queen Pageant at Traverse City Saturday.

Pam, 18, a stately five feet eight blue-eyed blond, will be among candidates from throughout the state vying for this prestigeous title.

As the 1978 Venetian Queen, Pam has represented the city at various events during the year. her reign will end with the crowning of a successor at the Venetian Queen Pageant July 26.

The National Cherry Queen Pageant will be held at St. Francis auditorium in Traverse City at 8 p.m. July 30. Tickets for the event must be purchased in advance. They may be obtained through the National Cherry Queen's committee in Traverse City.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dale Boss, Pam is a 1978 graduate of Charlevoix High School. She has completed one year of study at North Central Michigan College and plans to complete a second year there before transferring to Michigan State University where she will major in music or home economics.

She has many interests including sewing, both snow and water skiing, bicycling, bowling and "just being out of doors in northern Michigan."

Meanwhile, the search is on for candidates for the Venetian Queen Pageant.

According to Georgia Hufford, co-chairman of the Venetian Queen Pageant with Bonnie Edwards, candidates are now being accepted for the pageant scheduled for Thursday, July 26.

Deadline for entering the pageant is July 12.

Candidates must be between the ages of 17 (by June 15) and 21 years of age (by the same date); single (never having been married), and a permanent resident of the Charlevoix School District.

In addition to the personal interviews with the judges, candidates will be judged on talent, will answer a question asked by the emcee and will model garments.

Applications for the Venetian Queen Pageant may be obtained at the Charlevoix Chamber of Commerce office, 408 Bridge Street.

The Venetian Queen Pageant is scheduled for July 26 at the high school gymnasium. At that time the reigning Venetian Queen, Pam Boss, will crown her successor.

Township to consider rezoning request July 9

By Peg Ohle

A public hearing on rezoning 230 acres of land belonging to the Medusa Cement Company will be held Monday, July 9 at 7:30 p.m. in the Charlevoix Township Hall.

Medusa officials have asked the Charlevoix Township Board to rezone the agricultural (200 acres) and scenic reserve property (30 acres) to industrial.

The Charlevoix Township Zoning Board originally approved the rezoning. The Charlevoix County Planning Commission has also given it its unofficial blessing. However, the township board has yet to make a final decision on the rezoning request.

Officials from Medusa first came to the township board in February seeking the change in zoning. The board discussed the request at a March 12 meeting – before a large and boistorous crowd – and decided to table it for further study.

Since then the township zoning board has been having regularly published meetings "to work on the zoning ordinance and to considerd the conerns of the citizens," according to township Clerk Jo-Anne Elzinga.

The clerk said that 10 to 30 people have turned out for each meeting and have added their input to the deliberations.

Members of the zoning board will be on hand for the meeting on July 9, and it is anticipated they will make a report on their work sessions.

Mrs. Elzina pointed out that even if the rezoning to industrial use is granted, Medusa would not be able to do any mining on the property without first receiving a "special use" permit, which would also require a special hearing.

If the zoning request is granted, those objecting to it may initiate a referendum. Michigan Public Act 184 of 1943, as amended through 1978, which is the basis of all township zoning, specifically states that within 30 days following the passage of a zoning ordinace, or part of an ordinance, a petition signed by a given number of voters may be filed with the township clerk requesting the submission of the ordinance, of part of an ordinace, to the electors residing in the Township for their approval.

"Upon the filing of the petition, an ordinance or part of an ordinance passed by the township board shall not be invalidated until it is rejected by a majority of the registered voters in the portion of the township outside the limits of cities and villages voting thereon at the next regular election which supplies reasonable time for proper notices and printing of ballots, or at any special election called for that purpose," the law reads.

John Hess, county planner, states that a zoning change is considered to be "part of an ordinance".

Library initiates reading program

In an effort to encourage young children to read and to utilize the facilities offered by Charlevoix Public Library, a program whose theme is "Herb Sandwich" is being initiated by the Northland Library Cooperative of which the local library is a member.

To join the program, youngsters who will be entering any grade from the first through the sixth grade in September should stop at the Charlevoix Public Library at 103 Clinton St. and pick up their Hero Sandwich membership card. Deadline for registering for the program is Monday, June 2.

Each youngster registering will receive a Hero Sandwich file card to which stickers will be added for each book and author recorded on the file card which will remain at the library. Stickers will be selected from a large number of 'heroes' including the Hulk, Spiderman, Paddinton Bear and other familiar characters.

A diploma will be awarded at the conclusion of the program. There will also be a special treat for youngsters who complete their cards.

Graphics and other materials used in the Hero Sandwich project are furnished by the Northland Library Cooperative.

OSIMO not a sailboat, it's a wishbone cutter

By Tom Dammann

That unusual looking black hulled vessel with the A-frame rising from its deck, tied up at the city docks is OSIMO – one of the more unusual crafts to ply the Great Lakes.

Some have puzzled over her origins, even suggesting she is the ghost of the Monitor, but, in truth, she is a motorsailer, designed specifically for cruising in northern Lakes Michigan and Huron -- Georgian Bay in particular – the St. Mary's River and Lake Superior, which her owner-designer considers the world's finest fresh water cruising area.

OSIMO is the product of A. Richard Williams, 65, F.A.I.A., professor of architecture Emeritus, University of Illinois, Champaign, Ill., who has spent most of his summers at Neebish Island, 20 miles south of Sault Ste. Marie, of which his father was a native.

With its flush deck and center cockpit, OSIMO is a modification of the 43 foot Northshore Trawler Hull developed by T.D. Vinette Co., of Escanaba.

"It is a composite of several objectives," Prof. Williams explains, "with highest priority on ruggedness of construction, sea keeping ability, high visibility and control from the helm, spaciousness and livability below decks and economy of operation and maintenance."

Williams said he chose steel for his hull after consultation with shipbuilders and yachting friends. Deck and trim are made of teak, masts boom, lifeline stanchions and bow pulpit of aluminium.

Below decks are spacious living quarters with head room for anybody up to 8 feet tall. The v-berth forward is 7 feet by 7 feet. There is enough room to accoinodate five persons comfortably, though Williams prefers to keep his crew to two or three.

Three hundred and sixty gallon diesel fuel tanks supply a Perkins 4-236 horsepower engine which give the 39 foot eight inch 31,000 pound OSIMO a cruising range of 1440 statute miles.

Using the vessel's two head sails will increase that range considerably, Williams says.

"But OSIMO is not a sail boat," he emphasized. T.D. Vinette, who built her calls her a 'wishbone' cutter. We can use the two head sails efficiently for reaching, broad reaching and down wind sailing and cut the motor's RPM in half, thereby saving fuel.

"With the motor alone we can maintain a cruising speed of eight miles per hour, getting four and a half miles to the gallon of diesel," he continued. "Without the motor we can sail at four to five miles an hour, but with a sail area of only 500 square feet for a 16 ton boat that is more strain on their rigging than I'd like, though she does sail slowly and steadily."

OSIMO was launched July 12, 1977, and began her maiden voyage a month later.

"We're still in process, you might say," Williams said, as he finished up a small deck job one day this week, here in Round Lake Harbor. OSIMO is in Charlevoix for two weeks cruising. "Most everything works. A few things must be redone, and some things must be discarded. We're still trying to learn how best to use the small head sail for which I have just purchased a whisker pole (boom)."

Designer of homes, churches, schools and consultant for Chicago's River Edge Plan, Williams obviously derives pleasure from his motorsailer.

"There is an aesthetic plus from doing your own design," he said.

OSIMO means escape in Ojibway (Chippewa) language and so Williams will stay here through July 4, then cruise up to St. Ignace to watch the finish of the Chicago-Mackinac Island race later in the month.

From there he will head for Gore Bay to join the rendezvous of the Great Lakes Cruising Club, of which he is a member, on July 27-28. Then to Neebish to join family and friends.

Another bill to hurt business

Michigan industrialists and you the consumer are about to get it in the pocketbook again unless area legislators like Charles Varnum do a quick about face.

If Michigan's business climate isn't already bad enough, Michigan legislators are busy dreaming up a new bill to add further economic burdens for business much in this state.

House members are expected to vote this week on a bill that would drastically amend the Michigan Occupational Safety and Health Act (MIOSHA).

The bill is being touted by many as a reform to the present Michigan Safety Act, but in actuality will place added expense on employers, with questionable relationship to better safety standards. Some of the expenses would have to be passed onto you, the consumer.

House Bill 4532, was recently reported out of the House Labor Committee by a 11 to one vote, with Representative Varnum voting in support of the legislation. After its third reading in the House on Friday, all Michigan legislators are expected to vote this week on the final bill.

Some of the bill's provisions include the following:

– Provide at employer's expense, to on employee, all personal protective equipment.

– Provide medical examinations or tests, at employer expense to determine if employees are adversely affected by exposure to health hazards.

– Permit a Department of Labor representative to enter without delay a place of employment to physically inspect conditions, equipment, equipment and materials and to question the employer or employees regarding safety and health.

– Permit MIOSHA inspectors to (red) tag equipment or a process which is determined to be the source of imminent danger to an employee.

Although we would never oppose opportunities to protect a worker's health and safety, there must come a point where some of the burden has to be taken by the employee himself.

It would nice to think that all employers could afford to buy all safety equipment for all its staff, however some of the equipment purchases would be just too much of a burden. Under the act, employers would be responsible for providing safety shoes, hard hats, gloves and safety glasses.

The safety equipment issue is one that should be decided between the employers and their employees (either through collective bargaining or personal agreement) without government interference.

And while on the surface it would seem admirable for Labor Department inspectors to have immediate access to a plant for the purposes of inspection, as well as being able to red tag what they see as dangerous equipment, we feel this violates a employer's constitutional due process rights.

How would you feel if a policeman came charging into your house unannounced? Similarly, we feel an employer should have similar protections to prevent unnecessary harassment by inspectors.

We also feel the employer should have his "day in court" over any questions inspectors might have with equipment in plants. No one should be given the absolute power to shut down equipment without at least an employer having a chance to question the decision about an impartial review board. There have simply been too many cases, where state inspectors are not sufficiently skilled or experienced to make some of these questions.

We seriously question the merits of this bill and encourage both Reps. Ralph Ostling and Charles Varnum to vote against it.

This is simply another case in point of why Michigan industry finds it difficult to do business in this state.

For you the consumer, this legislation will probably mean higher prices because business is simply going to have to pass the costs on to someone. And that someone will be you.

The sailboat boom

If I had a cupful of money to invest in a promising industry, I think I would hunt up a nice little sailboat company and shoot the works.

With energy scarce and getting scarcer by the day, the sailboat business is in for a tremendous boom – if it hasn't started already. Judging from the number of sailboats in Round Lake and moored at the city dock this past weekend, the surge already may be under way.

From a practical point of view, the nation would appear ripe for renewed emphasis on sailboating. As gasoline nudges the $1-a-gallon mark, boaters are going to think twice before ramming around with a hefty marine gas-guzzler at the stern.

New boaters are bound to give a few extra points on the balance sheet to sailboats when it comes to selecting a pleasure craft – simply from the standpoint of energy conservation.

Of course, they won't pick a sailboat if they intend to tow water skiers. Or travel long distances in very short periods of time. Or even if they insist upon power-on-demand.

A sailboat is not a very exciting vessel in a dead calm.

Furthermore, skeptics tell me that sail boaters and power boaters are two different breeds of fish. The former, they say, are up-and-at-'em, go-go-go folks who enjoy the sensation of pure power at their command. Sail boaters, on the other hand, are more relaxed. If the weather isn't just right, they'd just as soon sit in port all day reading James Joyce and sipping mint juleps.

Skeptics say you'll never make a sail boater out of a power boater – and vice versa. And they may be right.

However the entire nation – from the White House on down – is now taking a long, hard, look at wind power as one of the energy sources of the future. And it is no secret that the sailboat was one of the earliest and longest lasting applications of wind power the world over. Wind has powered boats practically since the beginning of recorded history. Furthermore, sailboats are still used commercially in many parts of the world today, notably the Far East.

Wind power, of course, brought the first Norse and Italian explorers to the American continent and sailing ships were used exclusively on Atlantic crossings for the next 350 years.

Obviously, wind puwer is one source of energy which must not be overlooked in our search for alternate sources of energy. And one of the most easily attainable applications would be in the field of recreational boating.

Is it possible that the schooners of yesteryear may return as a means of hauling cargo on the Great Lakes?

I put the question to a retired merchant marine officer the other day.

"It's not likely," he said, "unless the energy situation gets a lot worse than it is today."

Of course, there was a time when the Round Lake literally bristled with the tall masts of sailing ships from distant ports. Although the last of the big boats – the Keuka – sank in Lake Charlevoix almost a half-century ago, old timers remember what an important part the schooner fleet played in the economic life of early Charlevoix.

My merchant marine friend is probably correct. It is unlikely that the United States will ever return to wind-powered cargo boats. But most of us will probably live to see a resurgence of economical water transportation generally, as overland freight costs continue to skyrocket.

In the meantime, look for more sailboats on Round Lake, Lake Charlevoix, Lake Michigan and adjoining waterways. They could be the wave of the future. And if I had a cupful of money, you know where I'd put it.

Ralph Ostling

Emergency powers bill passed

A bill giving the governor broad new powers during an energy emergency was hastily approved by the Legislature last week in an effort to help Michigan avoid critical fuel shortages. The Legislature passed the bill late in the afternoon following a day of meetings involving the administration, the independent truckers and the petroleum companies.

A number of lawmakers met with the governor last Wednesday afternoon to discuss the effect of the trucker's strike. He oppealed to us to pass the emergency powers bill and said he would sign it within 24 hours. The state police escorted more than 125 tankers from the gasoline terminal at Niles the first day following the governor's order without incident and the situation was alleviated somewhat.

As you know, the independent truckers have agreed to stop the blockade at the huge Tank Town terminals in Niles, but may continue to picket other pipeline terminals in the state.

The situation is still serious, but the state has taken a number of steps, which include permitting the truckers to recover the substantial diesel fuel cost increases through their rates, which could bring this strike to an end.

Most of the complaints voiced by the independent truckers, however, must be handled on the federal level. We can certainly examine our state registration requirements, round trip haubing leases, weight standards and fuel and gas tax increases, but this represents only part of the problem.

In the meantime, the citizens of Michigan must be assured that the supply of food, produce and medicine will not be strangled by this strike, and we have to assure them that they will be able to get to and from their places of employment.

This is where the emergency powers bill becomes so important. It gives the governor the leverage he may need to avert a critical energy shortage.

Some hope for foreign language

WASHINGTON — One of the national shames is the public's illiteracy in foreign languages. It is a longstanding affliction, and as long os we Americans dominated the world, the problem had all the impact on the republic's conscience as a feather falling to earth.

But the time – sired by our virility in World War II – when Americans could get along on English alone is fading. The United States must now get in bne after Europeans, Japanese, Koreans, Taiwanese and even Russians to win the world's business and affections. Businessmen and diplomats from these nations usually are multilingual. Our people are not. So we sometimes lose because of our affliction.

The facts are scandalous. The U.S. Foreign Service has no foreign language requirement for applicants. About half the foreign service officers dispatched overseas do nnt meet the language qualification for their positions. When our top officials visit China, they rely on Chinese, not Americans, for interpreting.

U.S. business firms usually count on foreign nationals to keep communications going in overseas offices. Businessmen from other nations simply do better than our people -- in this increasingly competitive world morket – when products are close in quality and price, because the American must use an interpreter. Many overseas customers resent the implicit colonialism in the refusal of Americans to learn the host nation's language.

Time was when any first-rate high school required one foreign longuage for students planning to attend college. The requirement is now the exception. Indeed, only 10 percent of college-level institutions now require applicants to have taken a foreign language. Fewer colleges make it a must to pass a foreign language course for graduation. And the percentage of M.A.'s and Ph.Ds proficient in a foreign language dwindles. Many educators, even on the university level, don't want to visit any subject regarded by youngsters as difficult on the poor student body.

Distressed over this ignoramous situation, Rep. Paul Simon (D-Ill.) went to President Carter in 1977 and asked him to form o presidential commission on foreign language. Carter did, and the commission, given a six-month life, began its work last fall.

Like most presidential commissions, especially those people with academics, this one fussed and snorted. Schoolmen warned that while there is great need for more language study, federal intrusion on curriculum is a danger. Businessman acknowledged that U.S. odvantages in the world market were shrinking, but claimed that if their people needed mere language capability, free enterprise would see to it. There was considerable thumping for an extension media campaign to waken the citizenry to the low state of language skills.

Instead of forming task forces and knuckling down to work, most commissions hire consultants and think tanks to do the spadework. This commission, with the help of other groups, paid the Rand Corp. $69,000 to tell them that business was concerned about the problem but wasn't doing much about it and the University of Michigan's Research Center about $20,000 for a survey (accomplished by five-minute phone calls to 962 respondents) which reported:

–While 40 percent of Americans claim familiarity with a foreign language, only 24 percent said they could read, write, or speak one (that figure is likely inflated).

–Only 30 percent surveyed said they studied a foreign language in school, but 45 percent said they would like to try (ah, hope springs enternal, but do people want to study?)

–About 47 percent believe that learning a foreign language should be required of junior or senior high school students. Some 38 percent think there should be a foreign language requirement for admission to college and for graduotion as well.

–A vast majority of Americans have no knowledge of foreign languages. Only 8 percent have studied a language long enough (four years or more) to be able to use it.

"This is not only bad for American business abroad," said Rep. Leon Panetta (D-Calif.), "but it's culturally bad for our country too.'

Panetta, who speaks Italian fluently and can handle Spanish, sponsored legislation requiring the State Department to set a language requirement for foreign service officers. Panetta, Simon (speaks a little German), Rep. Millicent Fenwick (R-N.J.) (fluent in three languages) and Sen. Mark Hatfield (R-Ore.) (who speaks no foreign language) – as members – favor using the Defense Education Act to help fund and strengthen language departments in all our schools and colleges. This would be money well spent.

Right now, the commission, with the inevitable six-month extension, is drafting its report to the President. It has held public meetings in six cities and was delighted with an enthusiastic turnout of 500 souls in San Francisco. One of the most encouraging developments is in Oregon where a "Global Competency" program – including achievement in foreign language – is required in public schools.

Along the way, the 25 members sounded each other out on their own language skills. Alas, U.S. Commissioner of Education Ernest L. Boyer, a member, has no foreign language proficiency, according to his office. Nor do a number of other commission members.

Member Priscilla Ching-Chung of the University of Hawaii at Manoa laments that stateside commissions ignore her islands, so a delegation plans to visit Hawaii in August. To learn how to say Aloha! nn doubt.

Resolution to commend Reeves

Senator Mitch Irwin (D-Sault Ste. Marie) announces introduction and Senate passage of a Senate Concurrent Resolution commending actor Christopher Reeve and the filming company of Universal Pictures' production, "Somewhere in Time."

"The filming of a major motion picture has been a fascinating experience for everyone involved," Irwin said. "Islanders and visitors alike have enjoyed a firsthand glimpse into the day-to-day production of a movie, while the actors, technicians and entire film crew of more than 100 have experienced the charm of Mackinac Island and the warmth of its people."

Fireworks, music and champagne to highlight cruise

The Charlevoix Chamber of Commerce will be sponsoring a Champagne Cruise on board the Beaver Islander the night of July 4.

And, according to Jacquie Nerta, chamber manager, "the sound of skyrockets won't be the only things popping on board."

Departing from the city dock at 8:30 p.m., the Beaver Islander will cruise the North Arm of Lake Charlevoix to Boyne City to view the fireworks display.

On the cruise, passengers will listen to the music of Antares - a jazz ensemble of sax, bass, persussion, piano and drums. Along with original pieces by the band leader, Tom Bergeron, Antares will perform jazz standards by contemporary composers like Wayne Shorter, Herbie Hancock, Keith Jarrett and Charles Mingus, as well as popular pieces by Duke Ellington, Cole Porter and George Gershwin. The Ann Arbor based group is composed of Bergeron on saxaphone, Ted Harley on bass, Dave Mason on percussion, Rick Hollander on drums and Tod Norian on the piano.

There will be an open bar on the cruise.

Tickets should be purchased in advance at the Charlevoix Chamber of Commerce.

The motor ship has an enclosed area and will sail regardless of the weather.

Peter Green captures 68th Michigan Amateur

Peter Green of Franklin won the 68th annual Michigan Amateur Sunday at the Belvedere Golf Club by scoring a 2-1 victory over Steve Braun of Flint.

It marked the second time in Green's career that he has won the Michigan Amateur. He also won it 10 years ago.

"This is a real tribute," Green said after the match. "I beat some great players, guys that can really play this game...and that makes me feel good."

Green got off to a rather sluggish start. He missed several short putts and trailed by one shot after four holes.

"I was jumpy," he explained afterwards. "I think anytime you get to the finals you get jumpy.

"But I thought my putts on one, two and four (holes) were good putts."

Green won the fifth hole to even the match, but promptly bogeyed the sixth hole to fall a stroke behind again.

That Green made his move. He won four of the next five holes - both shot par on 10 - to move three shots ahead.

It looked like the match was settled, especially when Green had a golden opportunity for a birdie on 12. But the sandy-haired veteran runnned the cup with his putt.

Given new life, Braun made his move. He birdied 13 to close the gap to two strokes. And then won 16 when Green couldn't recover after hitting lus drive into the sand trap.

Suddenly, it did not look like a sure thing anymure for Green. His three shot lead had evaporated.

"I still had the lead, but I kept telling myself 'don't panic, don't panic'," he said he said.

Green did not panic. It was Braun whu made the error.

On his tee shot at 17, Braun drove the ball to the left of the green and down an embankment. It made for a difficult second shot. Green's tee shot reached the green

"That was a flat out and out bad shot," Braun said. "It was a terrible swing.

"When I got near the heat (match got close) I failed."

Braun failed to convert par on the 183 yard hole at 17 and the match was over.

Braun was generous in his praise of Green.

"The best man won," he said.

"Pete plays at a level up here," Braun said holding his hand at eye level. "He wins the big amateur tournaments.

"I play at a level here, he added dropping his hand below his chin. "I win local tournaments."

Both Green and Braun had an easy time in the semi-finals played Sunday morning. Green eliminated Port Huron's Roy Schultheiss 5-4 and Braun beat Greg Alksnis of Grand Rapids 4-3.

Charlevoix's Mike Custer had a good tournament. Custer was one of 64 – out of 325 - golfers who qualified for match play. Custer then won his first match before bowing to Mark Hill 2-1.

This weekend Custer will go to Myrtle Beach, South Carolina to compete in the Southern Junior Golf Tournament June 28-30.

For Green, well, he plans to play in the Michigan Open.

Green looks away after missing putt.

Green's putt come up short.

The winner - Peter Green.

The loser - Steve Braun.

Number of farms declining, but technology increasing yields

Meet Charlevoix

Ed Rebman

Ed Rebman has been cooperative extension direetor for Charlevoix County for almost 34 years. This week he tells the Courier about his job and how it has changed during the years.

COURIER: What is the Cooperative Extension Service?

REBMAN: It is the education arm of Michigan State University, serving the counties. We put on programs for 4-H, home economics, agriculture, marketing, natural resources – all timely subjects – but most of all we answer questions.

COURIER: Do you limit your work to farm problems?

REBMAN: No, we deal with every body. Just recenlly we have had questions on the sex of white birch trees, how to set up a farm corporation, what weed spray to use on a crop, whether there would be any adverse effect on vegetables planted in a forner peony bed, how to insulate a house, and what's wrong with a patch of lawn where the grass won't grow properly.

COURIER: What types of farms are most profitable in Charlevoix County?

REBMAN: Dairy and livestock have the biggest sales. Most of the hay and corn is marketed through them, too. Corn is not a very good cash crop, neither is hay. The price depends on the weather, supply and demand. The good weather of the last couple of weeks has increase the hay crop and dropped the price. We have about 200 acres of asparagus. There used to be a lot of string beans and potatoes. Potatoes are a high investment crop. They really need irrigation and air-conditioned storage. Our rolling Terrain is not as good as flat lands are. Frank Sneathen nd Hayes Township is really the only potato farmer left in the country.

COURIER: What is happening to the size and number of farms in the county?

REBMAN: Some farms are enlarging, but the number is declining. We are losing agricultural land to development, but maybe we won't lose that much production. Technology will increase yields. The cost of farming is going up bike everything else. We used to figure the cost of a tractor at $100 per horsepower. No more. Taxes are up, too, but farmers can get some relief from Act 116, the Farmland and Open Space Act. Under Act 116, farmers contract to leave their acreage in agriculture for 10 years, and get a tax break for doing so. We have eight or 10 farms in the county now operating under Act 116. I would urge any farmer interested in staying in farming and keeping the land for his family to investigate 116. It's necessary with today's taxes. The Homestead Act also helps with the tax situation.

COURIER: If you were to enter farming today as a young man, what type of farm would you have?

REBMAN: A dairy farm. You're really tied down with a dairy farm but it's the best for the area. It's an intensive type of business. The costs are high, too. It now costs from $2,500 to $3,500 per cow to set up a dairy farm. This includes the cost of livestock and equipment.

COURIER: What effect is the oil shortage going to have on farming?

REBMAN: None, right away. Farmers were put on an allocation system last spring by the federal government. The crops are planted now. But if a real shortage occurs, they will be hit like everyone else, not having enough fuel for operating. Many fertilizers are petroleum-based, too.

COURIER: What is the biggest change you've seen in farm operations since you started.

REBMAN: Specialization. It used to be that every farm had 25 to 100 chickens, some pigs, and cows for their own milk. We've gone from diversification to specialization, "putting all our eggs in one basket", as it were. As far as the office is concerned, we now have a computer which we use to get immediate information from headquarters in Ann Arbor. All we have to do is plug it in and wait for the answer.

COURIER: You had a project last year to try to control the cereal leaf beetles. How did that work out?

REBMAN: We distributed parasites in 10 different areas. Now I'm going to pick up samples of the beetles to see if they were affected by the parasites.

COURIER: How do the parasites work?

REBMAN: It's a type of control other than chemicals. These parasites could sterilize the beetles, kill the larvae, enter the eggs and stop them from hatching – it all depends on the insect and the parasite.

COURIER: Where did you grow up?

REBMAN: On a farm near Copemish. I lost my hand in a cornhusk er in 1930.

COURIER: Where did you go to college?

REBMAN: I went to Central Michigan for a year, then to Michigan State, where I got a degree in farm management and math. That was June, 1942. Then, in the early 50's, while working here in Charlevoix County I got a master's degree in extension work.

COURIER: Your offices used to be over the post office here in Boyne City. How do you like your new quarters in City Hall?

REBMAN: Great. Before I couldn't get into my office until 9:30 in the morning, our offices were dark, and we were crowded. Now we have plenty of room and are right next to the Soil Conservation Service and the Stabilization & Conservation County Committee.

COURIER: Have you lived in Boyne City since taking the job here?

REBMAN: Yes, Virginia and I have raised our four children here, Susan is married and lives in Petoskey where she's a nurse at Little Traverse Hospital, Edward, Jr. is married and is studying for a master's degree in business administration at Michigan State, Joy and her husband run the Dairy Queen here in town, and Betty Ann works there.

COURIER: We know you are famous for barbecuing chicken. Do you have any other hobbies?

REBMAN: Just fishing and hunting. I take the deer season off. I used to fish in Canada but didn't get there last year and probably won't this year because of the gas problem.

COURIER: One thing we didn't ask you. How is your office financed?

REBMAN: It's a cooperative deal with federal, state and local governments. Federal and state funds pay the salaries and the county pays office expenses.

Historical Society to meet July 3

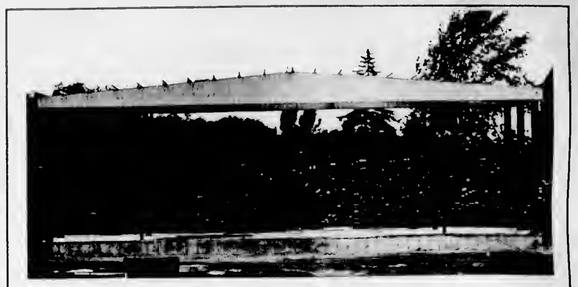
The Charlevoix Historical Society will hold its annual meeting on Tuesday evening, July 3, at 8 p.m. in the community room of the First State Bank of Charlevoix.

There will be an election of officers for the coming year and changes in the bylaws will be considered.

An informal program will include a discussion of family heritage. Members and friends of the society are invited to bring items which have come to them from previous family generations and provide a link with the past in the Charlevoix area or elsewhere.

As a member of the society expresses it, "As our society has become more mobile, traditional homes and their furnishings remaining in families through successive generations are truly becoming a thing of the past, along with attics that often contained a family record of times gone by."

Members of the Historical Society are urged to attend this meeting and participate in outlining objectives for the coming year.



The new stage at Castle Farms is nearing completion. Pyramid Productions will be handling the music concerts this summer. A spokesman for the company said it will be announced soon when the concert season will open. Officials hoped to have a concert on "July 6-7 or 8" but it is not known if they will.

William Welke is resigning as a deputy of the Charlevoix County Sheriff's Department effective July 19.

In a letter to Sheriff George Lasater, the deputy on Beaver Island said, "this action is a result of strong political implications that seemingly govern yuur actions concerning Beaver Island. I have found it increasingly difficult to effecively perform my duties in an efficient and conscientuous manner. Politics and police work do not mix and i no longer wish tu continue being a pawn in this type of action."

Welke told the Courier that he has been a deputy for almost 9½ years and that alghough he is classified as a part time employee he is on call 24 bours a day seven days a week.

"I'm a full time employee who gets part time pay. I'm tired of it."

Re-regulate, Irwin says

State Senator Mitch Irwin (D-Sault Ste. Marie) introduced a Senate Concurrent Resolution calling on Congress to re-regulate the trucking industry.

Irwin, a member of the Senate Transportation and Tourist Indnstry Committee, listened to striking independent truckers' complaints at a committee hearing Thursday, and again in a private meeting with Governor Milliken Friday afternoon. The main problems, according to the independent truckers, have to do with the morass of government regulations.

"The truckers have legitimate gripes about conflicting weight and length limits, taxes, and numberous fees imposed on the industry. When you add that to the different bureaucratic procedure in each state, along with rising diesel fuel costs, it is not hard to understand their frustration," said Irwin.

Irwin's resolution would:

1. Urge all states to adopt uniform weight and length regulations;
2. Request that reciprocal permit systems be instituted in all states; and
3. Urge that all states review reporting requirements for truckers on logs and gasoline permit requirements.

Toradze featured soloist at Van Cliburn benefit concert

INTERLOCHEN – In 1958, a young American pianist named Van Cliburn entered the Tchaikovsky Internatiunal Competition, went to Moscow and emerged triumphant, winning the Soviet Union's top music prize and overnight stardom.

In 1977, a young Soviet pianist, Alexander Toradze, came to Amerlea frum Moscow, entered the Van Cliburn Piano Competition, and won a silver medal, $5,000, and a concert tour of North America.

Critics and musicians heaped lavish praise on Toradze. "A force of nature, like a volcano... a mixture of the animal and the angel," said the pianist Lili Kraus. And the New York Times reported that "Toradze almost literally played the other two (top prize-winners) off the stage." In addition, a film documentary was made on Toradze and will be televised by PBS in the fall.

This summer at the Interlochen Arts Festival, Toradze will be the featured soloist in the National Music Camp's 1979 Van Cliburn Benefit Concert. At 8 p.m., July 21, Toradze will join the World Youth Symphony Orchestra and conductor George C. Wilson in a performance of Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto, with which Cliburn created such a sensation 21 years ago. Van Cliburn himself, who is taking a two-year respite from his concert career, plans to attend the concert.

"Since Van Cliburn first performed at Interlochen in 1961, his benefit concerts have raised some $400,000 in scholarship funds for needy and deserving students," says Roger E. Jacobi, president of Interlochen Center for the Arts. "Mr. Cliburn is concerned that the long tradition of the Cliburn Benefit Concert continue at Interlochen during his two years away from the concert stage."

Born 26 years ago in Tbilisi, Toradze made his first professional public appearance at age nine in a commemorative concert honoring Yuri Gagarin and man's first space flight. He enrolled in The Moscow Conservatory in 1971, studying with Yacov Zak, Boris Zemlyansky, and Lev Naumov. Before entering the Cliburn Competition he had performed as recitalist and as soloist with orchestras throughout the Soviet Union.

This year he performed Prokofiev's Third Piano Concerto with the Moscow Philharmonic Orchestra both in New York City, and in Washington, D.C., where Van Cliburn was in attendance.

Washington Post critic Paul Hume described Toradze as "a great bear of a man who took over the famous concertu without a hint of effort ... The audience carried on after the concerto as if it had been played by Horowitz, Rachmaninov and Paderewski put together."

The Washington Star commented that Toradze "had the Kennedy Center audience on its feet, and they stayed there through a series of ovations richly earned by this young and extraordinary gifted musician." And, Star critic Theodore W. Libbey, Jr., continued, Toradze's playing "left no doubt in anyone's mind that a work of greatness had met with a performer of greatness..."

Toradze will come to Interlochen directly from his debut appearance at California's Hollywood Bowl. And following his performance with the World Youth Symphony Orchestra, the Russian-born pianist will fly to Cleveland, where he will appear with the Cleveland Orchestra at the Blossom Musical Festival.

Tickets for the Van Cliburn Benefit Concert with Toradze are priced at $10, $8, and $6, and are available by mail from Concert Manager, National Music Camp, Interlochen, MI 49643 (phone: 616-276-9221). Checks should be made payable to National Music Camp. Receipt of orders will be acknowledged and tickets mailed after June 24.

Workshop on inland lakes management scheduled June 29

Lake property owners who have been actively seeking to safeguard the quality and life of their lakes have been invited to attend a workshop on inland lakes management.

The workshop, sponsored by the Northwest Michigan Regional Planning and Development Commission will be held on Friday, June 29, at the Twin Lakes 4-H camp near Traverse City. It will begin at 10 a.m. and last through the afternoon.

The recently-published Inland Lakes Management Manual, developed for the planning commission by its two water quality specialists, Chuck Grant and Tom Weaver, will be used as a reference and guide during the course of the workshop. Copies of the manual have been made available to participants.

Grant and weaver will be present to conduct the workshop. "We are going to present some of the tools used in proper management of a lake, as well as explore the different problems, benefits, and requirements for an inland lakes management scheme in our region," explained Chuck Grant.

"The workshop will detail many of the reasons why we have to act now if we are to preserve the good water quality that our lakes have now."

Workshop participants will be schooled in how to develop a lake and watershed management plan. They will also be taught the procedures used in the Self-Help Water Quality Monitoring Program, a practical, inexpensive program designed by the State Department of Natural Resources to effectively monitor the quality of inland lakes over a number of years.

A discussion period will follow the day's sessions, during which time lakeside property owners will have a chance to exchange experiences and ideas concerning lake associations; lake management, or other related topics. Information on financial and technical assistance available to lake associations will also be discussed.

For more information call Chuck Grant or Toni Weaver at the Northwest Michigan Regional Planning and Development Commission at 946-5922.

Senior citizens to perform comedy July 4th and 7th

Bonnie Omland Thomas is at the piano directing the rehearsal. "OK, next group," she bellows as a foursome scurries to the stage. "Remember, it's got to be light, cheery and gay."

Almost as soon as the four singers reach the stage Bonnie starts banging out notes on the piano.

The group rehearses its song twice. They exit and a duo appears on stage. The quick pace continues.

On July 4th and 7th, senior citizens from Charlevoix County will present a one act comedy entitled "The Family Doctor." The operetta will be performed at 1 p.m. in front of the Community Building on Main Street in East Jordan.

"It's a typical boy meets girl love story," explains Bonnie Omland Thomas, the director.

The operetta revolves around a young boy named Tom (played by Albert Omland). While working as a butcher Tom falls in love with a young girl named Edith Gilbert (played by Mrs. Allena Elliott).

Edith's ailing father, however, tries to squash the relationship. She is told not to see Tom again.

But clever Tom has a trick up his sleeve. He disguises himself as a doctor - Dr. Drake - and appears at the Gilbert's and tells Mr. Gilbert that he can improve his failing health.

To make a long story short, Edith's father learns that Dr. Drake is really Tom. But he finally relents and lets the relationship blossom.

The cast, which also features Jason Snyder, Isabel David, Milton Veverka, May Lou Veverka, Fred Eichler, Florence Jackson, Ruby Miller, Hilda Bathke, Cora Jensen and Muriel Zoulek, has been rehearsing for three weeks.

"They're having a ball with it," Bonnie said. "They're starting to get excited about performing it for a real audience."

Scripts for the play were supplied by Northwestern State Bank. The stage will be provided by Koontz Construction.

When it comes to rustproofing...
Once is not enough.

Tuff-Kote rustproofs your car twice with our exclusive 2-Step System.
Many rustproofers say they can rustproof your new car. But only Tuff-Kote rustproofs your car twice with an exclusive 2-Step System.

Step 1. Penetrant.

A new car can start rusting even before it leaves the showroom. That's where Tuff-Kote's unique penetrant comes in. It creeps down to the bare metal to help stop existing rust.

Step 2. Sealant.

Second, Tuff-Kote applies a special sealant. It locks out salt, moisture, and corrosive elements to keep new rust from starting.

A 5-year full repair limited warranty.
While our 2-Step System protects your car from rust, our tuff-repair, limited warranty protects you from something going wrong.

That means, in the unlikely event of any failure as described in the warranty, Tuff-Kote will fully repair the rust-damaged area. Regardless of cost. (Check your dealer for complete warranty details on privately owned new cars.)

FAITH MAKES GOOD NEIGHBORS OF GREAT NATIONS

The boundary line dividing two countries can become a barricade of mutual hostility; but in the case of Canada and the United States it has always served as a bridge of friendship between two peoples with such trust, respect and understanding as to make the celebration of Canada-U.S. Goodwill Week quite unnecessary. Nowhere along the three thousand-mile borderline that spans our continent have security measures ever been needed, and the citizens on both sides may enter and leave each other's land whenever they wish. This is a fine example of the spirit of brotherhood that has been taught by every religious faith, in every land. Wherever you live, you will learn this by attending the Church of your choice.

"Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. Love worketh no ill to his neighbor: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law."
-Romans 13:9, 10

A living proof to all the world of faith in brotherhood.

A sad legacy

You and Me Against the World

You and me against the world
Sometimes it feels like you and me against the world
When all the others turn their backs and walk away
You can count on me to stay
Remember when the circus came to town
And you were frightened by the clown
Wasn't it nice to be around someone that you knew
Someone who was big and str... ?
And lookin out for you and me against the world
Sometimes it feels like you and me against the world"
And for all the times we've cried I always felt that God was on our side -
And when one of us is gone
And one of us is left to carry on
Then remembering will have to do
Our memories alone will get us through
Think about the days of me and you
Of you and me against the world

When I was a child, I didn't know about divorce. If my parents ever considered it themselves or had any divorced friends, they kept it a well-concealed secret. The word itself didn't even exist in that world, whether out of a lack of incidence or out of some sense of obligation to protect the children from harsh realities. All I knew about it was that divorce was something you didn't talk about, like the sixth and ninth Commandments. Looking back, I suppose I thought it was a sin, after all the Church was against anybody doing it. But more than that, divorce was a question which simply never came up.

It's been a long time since I was a child. The question of divorce comes up frequently these days. Now there are friends whose parents have gotten divorces, family members who have gotten divorces, friends who have gotten divorces, T.V. shows about divorces, novels about divorces, even priests of the Church who have gotten divorces. The children are friends of our children at school. They are children of our friends. They are neighborhood children.

The children of divorce and the parents who are left to carry on raising them as mothers and fathers without partners are what this song is about. It is what the current touching novel by Avery Corman, Kramer Versus Kramer is about. It is what the T.V. show One Day At A Time is about. Like opposition to war, women's lib and racial equabity, divorce is with us – and with the media.

Not long ago, our daughter came home from school bearing tidings of the latest news: that one of her good friend's parents were "splitting up." On a popular T.V. show Eight is Enough, Nicholas, age 9, asks older brother Tommy about the meaning of the divorce his foster grandparents have imposed upon the family. "Do you mean, if you don't want to be roommates with me anymore, we should get a divorce?"

"No," replies Tommy. "You probably couldn't afford the alimony."

Now that I'm no longer a child, I'm sure that being an ostrich about reabity, is hardly the way to deal with it. But now that I have children, I'm concerned about how they will cope with the reality given the absence of protective sand over their heads. I guess my heart goes out to all the children of divorce and the single parents who continue to love and raise them.

Divorce seems to be a sad legacy we leave. Could it be because our generation sings still another song:

It's a hard time for lovers
Everyone wants to be free
It's a hard time for lovers
Everyone saying, I've gotta be me
Without you.

Township Board Approves Medusa's Zoning

By Tom Dammann

The Charlevoix Township Board approved Medusa Cement Company's request to rezone 230.(acres of land the company owns south of Bell's Bay Road from agricultural to industrial by a vote of 3 to 2 Monday night.

Voting for approval of the request, which had been previously recommended by the township zoning board and the Charlevoix County Planning Commission were Oscar Stroud, township supervisor, Jo Ann Elzinga and Rose Bergmann. Opposed were H. Dale Glass and Donald Smith.

The matter was argued 40 minutes before the commencement of the board's regular monthly meeting with members of the township zoning board sitting with the township board, a proceedure which is in accordance with state laws requiring such a meeting if so requested by not less two residents of the township, Stroud explained.

Some 30 persons attended with the majority speaking against approval for reasons ranging from the annoyance and damage caused by dust and blasting in the area, in which Medusa intends to eventually quarry, to the possiblity that mining operations might be harmful to the McGee Creek, a trout stream which runs through a southeast portion of the acreage.

Supporting approval was voiced by several persons, principally for economic reasons which are beneficial to the community.

John McGregor, assistant regional director of the Department of Natural Resources DNR), Roscommon, read a statement which said in part, "We believe a good mining plan should be prepared and submitted. It should deseribe the proposed action and describe how the company intends tu leave the land for posperity....

"The plan should place particular emphasis on the environmental inipact of the prooposed action on the area.

It should also address issues bke noise, dust, and esthetic damage that can result from mining activities."

In answer to a question from attorney Tom Pointner, representing Medusa, McGregor stated the DNR would probably required an environmental assessment, as well as an enviroment impact statement.

Replying to Stroud, McGregor assured the Board that he thought that there are sufficient state laws and regulations to enable the DNR tu contral Medusa's operations for the benefit of the public.

Richard Aull and Oscar Ward, both urged the board to put the question up a vote by township residents in a special referendum.

Ward argued that there is no need to rush the decision. He suggested that Medusa's record to date is lacking in so far as the environment is concerned and that now Medusa is owned by a "conglomerate", the New York based Crane Company, communication between local citizens and top management has become more difficult.

Stroud emphactically turned the suggestion of referendum, stating that the township board is elected to make such decisions for the voters.

Don Smith offered an amendment to the motion to approve to express the intention that the industrial designation be changed to a mineral resources district after the township board has worked out an ordinance setting up such an district as required under a new state law.

The amendment was defeated 3 to 2.

Monday night's action seemingly settles a controversey which has upset the communnity since last November when Medusa first requested the zoning change.

However, the Courier has learned that a study is underway to determine the legal steps that must be taken to petition for a referendum.

First State Bank donates boat

The First State Bank of Charlevoix is adding to the fund to erect a cover over the Charlevoix Park Band Stage.

The bank is donating a new 20-foot Sassy Sailboat designed by Ted McCutcheon of Charlevoix. It is a Day Sailor with a large cockpit and full keel, large enough to accommodate eight people. Made of yellow fiberglass and completely rigged, it is valued at $4,800.

Tickets for chances on the boat will be on sale throughout the area next week.

In making announcement of the gift, Lou Hollow, president of the First State Bank, said, "We believe the Band Stage committee needs something to get the fund drive off to a good start so it can be completed this summer."

The Bellamy Brothers concert July 27 at the Charlevoix High School will also benefit the Band Stage. Tickets for the 8 p.m. show may be obtained at the Chamber of Commerce and Flight Deck in Charlevoix, ABC Music in Petoskey and Gaylord, Northwestern State Bank in East Jordan, Bogema Pharmacy in Boyne City, and Fiedler's Musicland in Traverse City. They are $5 in advance and $6 at the door.

The Band Stage committee is also seeking individual donations, according to C.A. Odmark, "All contributors of $100 or more will have their names inscribed on a tablet on the stage," he said.

Lakeside Hobbycraft Fair set for this Saturday

Entries in the 11th annual Lakeside Hobbycraft Fair scheduled to be held in East Park on Saturday are fast approaching 100, says Mrs. Jacque Merta, Executive Secretary of the Charlevoix Chamber of Commerce.

The fair features arts and crafts of every kind some of which are on exhibit and others which are being offered for sale.

Mrs. Merta said that entries started coming in early from throughout the state and that despite the gasoline situation have continued at a steady rate.

She went on to say that a number of new types of entries have been received and promise to enlarge the wide range of items that have grown with the years.

Clothespin dolls, so popular at Wilbamsburg, are being exhibited this year by a new entry.

Another interesting addition will be those made from fibres including pillows, necklaces and wind chimes.

"We have had soft sculpture in the past but the various types of this have increased and people looking for the "soft and cuddly" are bound to find a wide choice" Mrs. Merta added.

Another newcomer to the Fair will offer hand-crafted cabinetry, all made from original designs.

Intricate German bobbin lace will also be featured. This delicate piece of handwork is new to the Fair.

Christmas tree ornaments are always popular and a newcomer to the Fair, Dorothea Pieniazek, will exhibit many made from imported materials.

The list goes on and on ... floral arrangements, driftwood items which are becoming collector's items, scrimshaw done with ivory and bones, macrame, ceramics, photography, butterfly craft, hand-painted seabeans, doll furniture, clothing of every description, bags, large and small, items made of wood... they will all be there.

The show opens on the rolling terraces of East Park at 10 a.m. and will continue throughout the day and early evening.

Scheduled to appear in the double elimination tournament are Northern Service Bureau of Petoskey, King James Court and Foremost Realty of Traverse City, Katko of Kalkaska, Heath's IGA of Gaylord, Northern Sanitation of Cheboygan, Tiny's Bubbles of Alpena, Topside Lounge, Townhouse Bar and The Team, all of Charlevoix.

Northern Service Bureau of Petoskey will go against Townhouse in the opener at 7:15 p.m. Friday with The Team taking on Foremost Realty of Traverse City in the nightcap at 8:30 p.m.

Action will get underway at 9 a.m. Saturday as Topside Lounge hosts Katko of Kalkaska followed Heath's IGA of Gaylord and Northern Sanitation of Cheboygan at 10:15 p.m.

Quarterfinals in the winner's bracket will follow at 3:15 and 4:30 p.m. before returning to the loser's bracket for games at 4:30 and 5:45 p.m. to close out the action for the day.

King James Court will enter the action at 11:30 a.m. Saturday when they take on the winner of the Northern Service Bureau-Townhouse winner. Tiny's Bubbles will meet the winner of the Heath-Northern Sanitation game at 12:45 p.m. Saturday.

As the tournament goes into play in the loser's bracket, action will shift to two fields in the same area with games scheduled for 2 p.m.

There will be doubleheads at the diamonds at 9 a.m. Sunday; the semi-finals in the winner's bracket at 10:15 a.m. followed by games at 11:30 a.m., and 12:45 p.m. before the finals at 2 p.m. on Sunday.

If another game is necessary, it will be played at 3:15 p.m.

There will be trophies for the winners and the runners-up as well as for the batting champions, M.V.P., and the home run champion Blissett said.

"The Women's Tournament was one of our most popular events last summer and I'm sure fans will find this year's event equally as exciting" Blissett added as he issued an invitation to the public to attend the event.

First Congregational Church fair planned for July 25

The First Congregational Church of Charlevoix will hold its annual Country Fair on July 25 at the church.

Featured at the fair will be unusual craft items from all over the world obtained through a marketing program known as Sales Exchange for Refugee Rehabilitation Vocations.

Among the crafts will be beautifully detailed carved wooden animals from Kenya and India, carved obvewood Christmas Creche figures from Jordan, and handmade dolls in colorful native dress from many countries.

In explaining the sale of these items, a spokesman for the church says:

"For many families around the world, caught in the backwash of war, natural disaster, or chronic poverty, a basic need is to find an income-producing activity. These are people at the lower end of the economic scale, in developing countries, who are not reached by the benefits of development. Yet many of these people have marketable handicraft skills. They need only the chance to sell their products in order to be self-supporting."

Started as a self-help program for World War II refugees, the Sales Exchange now involves thousands of artisans in 60 countries.

"These are art objects to cherish, and your purchases of these international crafts will help bring freedom from hunger, better health care, and new hope and new dignity to families that need your help," the church spokesman concluded.

Dr. James Stewart joins Charlevoix medical staff

Dr. Stewart

Charlevoix Area Hospital announced this week that Dr. F. James Stewart has joined its medical staff. Dr. Stewart, a native of Charlevoix, established his offices with Dr. Dennis Joy who shares his medical specialty – Family Practice.

A 1964 Charlevoix High School graduate, Dr. Stewart received his medical degree from Wayne State University Medical School. He holds a Masters Degree in Science from Wayne State in bacteriology, as well as a Bachelor of Science degree from Wayne State.

Dr. Stewart comes to Charlevoix having completed a three year residency in Family Practice at Midland Hospital Center, where this year he was chosen as the recipient of the Harry Towsley Award for 1979. Dr. Harry Towsley is a professor of Pediatrics at the University of Michigan. The award named for Towsley is given annually to the outstanding resident at Midland Hospital.

Dr. Stewart explained, recently, that Family Practice covers virtually every medical specialty from pediatrics to gerontology, including surgery.

"Family Practice physicians provide comprehensive continuing medical care for all members of a family," he said.

Stewart is a member of the Michigan Medical Society, the American Academy of Family Physicians, the Michigan Academy of Family Physicians, the Michigan Academy of Family physicians and the American Medical Association.

Dr. Stewart admits that he has always thought about returning to Charlevoix.

"I decided early in my training that d an opportunity to practice family medicine occured in Charlevoix, I would seriously consider it."

Last summer, Dr. Stewart spent three weeks in joint practice with Dr. Joy and another week this March, before he and his wife Tansley decided to move north with their 8 year old son Fray Dylan and infant daughter Duffy. He also admits that the lure of sailing had a definite influence on his decision.

Another important influence in Dr. Stewart's decision to go into medicine and return to Charlevoix was his grandfather Dr. Fray McMillan, who from 1918 to 1948 was a General Practitioner in Charlevoix, serving as Chief of the Medical Staff of Charlevoix Area Hospital, and colleague to Dr. Robert Armstrong.

"I was only two years old when he died, but I grew up hearing innumerable stories about him. It goes without saying he was a major figure in my life," Dr Stewart observes

Dr. Stewart opened his office last week, joining Dr. Joy in the medical building on Park Avenue across the street from Charlevoix Area Hospital.

His addition to the Charlevoix Area Hospital medical staff brings the active staff physicians to 12, with several specialists in internal medicine, surgery, obstetrics and gynecology, and Family Practice, as well as another physicians who are on the courtesy or consulting staff to the hospital.

Registrations being taken for Venetian foot race

Registrations are being accepted for the second annual Venetian Festival Foot Race to be run on three courses of varying lengths on Saturday, July 28, as part of the annual Venetian Festival.

Pete Spieles, event director, said the races attracted 200 entries in its first year and many more are anticipated this year.

Sponsored by the Charlevoix High School Cross Country team and the Charlevoix Chamber of Commerce, this group will be joined this year by the March of Dimes. In this division of the event, runners may obtain sponsors and run for the benefit of the March of Dimes.

All three distances will have divisions for various age groups. The mile event will have categories for men and women 30 and under; 19-29; 14-18 and 13 and under.

The 3.1 mile event will have slots for men 40-over; 30-90; 19-29; 14-18 and 13 and under. The women's division will begin with 30 and under and decrease to 13 and under.

In the major event, the 6.2 mile foot race, the men's category will include 40-over; 30-39; 19-29 and 18-under. The women's division will have three categories, 30-over; 19-29 and 18-under.

All participants will receive ribbons. In addition, the top three winners in each category will receive medals and trophies for the best times in each division.

There will also be a host of prizes including Nike Waffle trainers, Addidas Running Shoes (Brooks Vantage Supreme), Sub-4 Running Shorts, Rapper Sweat Suit and Taymor Utility Bag.

Bahnhoff Shop, Edwards' IGA, Kaden's Emporium, LeCycliste of Petoskey, Lieberman's of Charlevoix, Oleson's Food Store and Silent Sports North have donated prizes and refreshments.

Participants may register between 8:30 and 9:30 a.m. the morning of the race at the site of the race, the Charlevoix Elementary School on Division Ave. The starting times of the race is 9:30 a.m. for the one mile foot race and 10 a.m. for the longest races. All races will be run on blazed courses away from major highways.

The entry fee will be $3 for July 23 and $5 after that date, Spieles said.

Entry blanks may be found at the Bahnhof Shop, LeCyclciste and the Chamber of Commerce in Petoskey as well as the Chamber of Commerce here.

Entries may be mailed to: Pete Spieles, 800 Park Ave., Charlevoix, 49720.

Jim Withers and Greg Sikorski

It's V.I.P. 100,000th pizza

Bells rang and whistles blew recently when one of the regular partons of the Village Inn Pizza, Greg Sikorski, placed an order for his favorite pizza.

After recovering from the initial shock, Sikorski soon found that his order was the 100,000th since the Village Inn Pizza came into being and, as a result, all sorts of good things were happening to him....things like a special V.I.P. trophy, a $100 cash prize, a 29 inch V.I.P., a V.I.P. hat and T-shirt.

In relating the story, Jim Withers, who owns and operates the business location at 217 Bridge St., said: "We were aware that we were nearing the 100,000th mark."

"However, it happened on the weekend when things got rather hectic and it was on us before we knew it.

"We were all happy that it was one of our 'regulars' who placed the special order".

Village Inn Pizza isn't really new to Charlevoix.

The business opened in 1959 on South Brudge St. as the A&W in the building constructed by the late Bruce and Dorothy Withers.

In 1971, the building was enlarged and serving was moved inside. The following year, it became the Village Inn restaurant with a full line of regular menus rather than short orders.

In 1976, pizza became the specialty and the name was changed to Village Inn Pizza. The following year, the business was moved to the present downtown location.

The restaurant offers a wide selection of other foods in addition to any kind of pizza you'd like. It offers a free delivery service as well as a drive-in pick-up at the rear of the building.

Withers has operated the business since 1970. Mrs. Withers is in charge of the day shift and Shawn McDonouth the night shift.

Our Opinion

Another threat to our freedom

Last week's U.S. Supreme Court's decision that may allow the public to be barred from pre-trial hearings wields another serious blow to our First Amendment.

The justices affirmed, 5 to 4, a New York Court of Appeals decision giving judges wide discretion on when to close pretrial bearings on the admission of incriminating evidence.

The high court held the Constitution gives no "affirmative right of access" to pretrial proceedings.

In an opinion by Justice Potter Stewart, the court said that "to safeguard the due process rights of the accused, a trial Judge has an affirmative constitutional duty to minimize the effects of prejudicial pretrial publicity."

And because of the Constitution's pervasive concern for these due process rights, a trial judge may surely take protective measures even when they are not strictly and inescapably necesary," Stewart wrote.

"The Constitution nowhere mentions any right of access to a criminal trial on the part of the public; it's guarantee...is personal to the accused."

However, Stewart noted that in the case at issue, the denial of access was "not absolute but only temporary" because a transcript of the suppression hearing was later made available to the press and public.

Unlike the case of an absolute ban un access, therefore, the press here had the opportunity to inform the public of the details of the pretrial hearing accurately and completely," Stewart noted.

This decision is the Supreme Court's most important action in several yeas on the relationship between the Constitution's freedom of the press guarantee and its promise that criminal defendants will set a fair trial.

We, like the Gannett newspaper group and the many other press groups that appealed the case, feel this is the beginning of establishing routine secret pretrial proceedings

The Court noted that this ruling was necessary because the danger of early publicity in many eases "pose a special risk of of unfairness."

While the acjused criminal has a right for the selection of an impartial jury, we are also concerned about the public's right to make sure society is giving him a fair trial.

While we know that judges attempt to do the best job they can in guaranteeing a fair trial, we do not want to see the public's nor the press's access to the courtroom hindered.

The court has merely said the public may be barred from pre-trial hearings at an accused criminal's request when publicity poses a threat to selection of an impartial jury.

However because of the vagueness in its decision the court has once again only left the public with the costly alternative of appealing a judge's decision through the courts if they feel they were unfairly denied access to the courtroom.

You have already heard many times from both the print and electronic news medium that our First Amendment rights are being eroded by many recent Supreme Court decisions.

Many have thought it has simply been the press unjustly critiicizing the courts and government for taking away rights the press once thought it had.

But, it's more than the press's right, it's yours the public.

Why only summer?

"Why", asked my daughter Allison on Saturday morning as we snaked our way through Oleson's parking lot, "why do so many people come to Charlevoix in the summertime?"

A pretty good question from a 10 year old who was born in Charlevoix and has lived here all her life.

"They come to Charlevoix," says I, "because It's different from where they live. If they live in Livonia, or Clawson or Flint or Midland they're not close to any open water like Lake Michigan. I think they like our beaches, and our shops and our restaurants and the fact that, even on the hottest days, there is usually a breeze in Charlevoix. Maybe it's just because Charlevoix is a pretty place to watch boats."

"But why just summer?" Allison persisted. And I didn't have a good answer.

I think most Charlevoixans themselves prefer une of the "off" seasons – mellow fall, marshmallow winter or even brisk and invigorating spring, which never seems to start and never seems to end.

If you took a poll, I imagine most Charlevoixans would prefer fall when the days are mild and the hardwoods are alive with color. I don't think it's generally understood that because of the tempering influence of Lake Michigan, Charlevoix usually receives its first frost several weeks later than, say, the western suburbs of Detroit.

When I lived in Southfield, hardly a September went by withnut a killing frost. Along the northern Lake Michigan coast, however, such a frost seldom hits before the end of October or early November.

Winter, of course, alsu has its charms if you enjoy snow sports – or even snuggling up next to a wood stove with a good book.

Spring? Well, I think you'd really have to be thoroughly dedicated fisherman or a masochist to enjoy spring in Northern Michigan. In fact, it's probably impossible to be one without being the other.

After we returned home from shopping, I started thinking about Allison's question about our summer visitors and it bothered me. Although we have done a little traveling in the Midwest and Canada, I don't think Allison really believes that people eat their meals, go to bed and get up in the sprawling suburbs of Chicago and Detroit. Or that hundreds of people may live on a serap of land no bigger than our backyard in downtown Montreal.

I wonder if our children realize that they are bving in a community generally regarded as one of the most attractive in the state, when they really don't have much basis for comparison.

If so, what can we do to prepare them for the "outside world" when and if they must move away?

AT THIS WRITING, President Carter is still up on the mountain at Camp David drawing up a new set of Commandments which are supposed to steer the country through the energy crisis and into the 21st Century.

Holy Moses! That's a big order, but Mr. Carter reportedly is picking the brains of the nation's intelligentsia as well as own Georgia crackers before setting his course.

I hope, when it's all over, Carter will let us know what mental processes went into the cancellatnn of his scheduled TV appearance last Thursday night. Did he suddenly realize that the American people are tired of the same old platitudes about voluntary restraint and are beginning to demand a firm course of action to get us out of our present predicament? Or did some external event cause lum to pause and reconsider?

I hope he lets us know whenever he chooses to let us know what happened at his mountaintop domestic summit.

The Democratic governors who visited him Friday say they could discern no radical departure from his normal thinking patterns, which is a little discouraging. But he has talked with scholars, engineers, politicians and activists of one stripe or another since then, so maybe all is not lost.

Try your luck with advertising

_Okay, so it's only two ads, but they've appeared within one day of each other and if the momentum holds, we could have a trend on our hands.

I'm talking about an ad to sell a house and another one seeking employment that have dared use a refreshing and unique approach to advertising: honesty.

The first ad was out of London and was placed by a man trying to sell his house. His ad read: "Two and a half bedroom located in suburlia, miles from any pretty country, yet lacking the cultural facilities of any decent sized town. Pocket handkerchief garden which floods in winter, acid soil suited only to rhododendrons and thistles.

"It's convenient, expensive and dirty. The whole in terribie decay."

The second ad was placed by a woman newspaper executive who had had a hard day and decided to place an ad in the Job Wanted Female classification in Florida. She wrote:

"WANTED: EASY JOB: Eduented, experienced woman wants what most people want – a high paying job in an advisory role, three days a week with long lunch breaks, good benefits, including one-month vacations and a secretary. Does not do windows."

The possibility for honesty in advertising is unlimited. Wouldn't it be wonderful to see a husband embrace his wife, tweak her nose and say, "Honey, I don't know how you do it, taking care of the house, the six children, running an engineering firm, and serving on the Supreme Court bench," and she would look deeply into his face and smile, "I drink."

I told my husband what I'd really like to see is an ad under Used Cars that reads:

"We don't want to be your friend. We just want to sell you a car. We have the second-best deal in town with no intention of matching another offer. For this week and for as many weeks as it takes to unload it, we have a four-door, undependable gas hog that needs brakes, tires and a mechanic for an owner. Has a lot of toys under the hood (also in the back seat and trunk) and has been owned by everyone in town. We're pushing this turkey because it makes our lot look shabby."

My husband winced. "Who would buy a car with a pitch like that?"

"We did."

Thanks

Dear Sir:

On behalf of the Charlevoix community we wish to thank all the people who came to donate blood on Tuesday, June 26 at the Red Cross Bloodmobile. Through their life-giving support, blood is available to anyone in our community who needs it.

Thank you also to Beta Sigma Phi Sorority for their good job done in furnishing the canteen service, and to all the volunteers who assisted the Staff in registering and processing the donors. Another big "Thank you" goes to the men of the US Coast Guard, who not only donated blood, but who provided muscle power to set up and then pack up the equipment.

We appreciate the donations of supplies by Boggs Pastry Shop, Olesons, Edwards, Glens and Crown Drug. The timely coverage by the Charlevoix Courier and local radio stations helped to remind people. The contribution of the use of their facilities by the American Legion was also greatly appreciated.

Although 103 pints were collected, missing the goal of 125 pints previously set, the committee is grateful for the splendid cooperation of the community. We hope you'll all mark your calendars now for the next Bloodmobile on September 12. If you can't donate blood, consider giving your time.

Sincerely,
Charlevoix County

George Bush, the energetic, likable, ivy-league Texan

WASHINGTON – George Bush, a versatile, witty and energetic Texan, is finally announcing his presidential candidacy. He is a lit overdue. No Republican aspirant started earlier than Bush. In 1978 alone, he toured 42 states laying down the nourishment for the grass roots he claims will get him the nomination in 1980.

No one in the present pack is more qualified than Bush, 54. He's been businessman (oil drilling); politician (congressman, national GOP chairman); diplomat (Ambassador to the U.N., and U.S. Representative to the People's Republic of China); bureaucrat (CIA director); and teacher (adjunct professor, Rice Institute).

His father was a respected U.S. Senator from Connecticut. Bush was graduated from the best schools – Phillips Academy and Yale. He's wealthy, handsome and very likeable, well known among professional Republicans, but nowhere in the polls.

"I can't worry about every damned poll," Bush says. "I don't start with identification, I start with credentials. One is my ability to get good people to work with me in the states. Right now, we have the best organization of any candidate in the primary states."

Bush cites Iowa, where the first presidential balloting takes place, as a plus state for him. When he recites details of his recent Iowa tour, it sounds like a rundown of pleasant, Middle America towns where, a generation ago, the most exciting thing to do on Saturday night was to watch haircuts.

So while Reagan dominates and Connally climbs, Bush is satisfied to work the country, county ly county, and become "everybody's second choice." Being the undisputed second man, and having fair numbers liking him first, is "real strength," he argues, because it shows "my ability to unify."

His staff reflects this strategy. Bush startled polls by hiring George Wallace's presidential campaign manager, Charles Snyder. Some Washington eyebrows went up, too, when he signed on Sue Morrison, from the Democratic National Committee where she was communications director. He's also got one of Reagan's former top aides, David Keene; James A. Baker III, who was Ford's 1978 campaign manager as campaign chairman; Bob Mosbacher, socialite, winner of international yachting competition, former Ford campaign official and now Bush's finance chairman.

Though Bush was tardy to announce formally, he was the first in the republic to qualify for federal matching campaign funds for 1980. He did this by raising $5,000 or more (no contribution more than $250) in each of 20 states. All told, Bush has $663,000 in his campaign fund, about half the amount John Connally's campaign reports, and two fifths of Phil Crane's $1.7 million. Frontrunner Reagan has collected $527,000, and will go for the big money later.

Anyway, Bush's views on issues put him on the Right, although he once said: "I want conservatism to be sensitive and dynamic, not seared and reactionary."

He sees inflation as the key issue, and urges quick passsage of "Sunset" laws empowered to terminate many federal programs. He believes a tax cut is no good unless there is an equally important cut in federal spending, and he says the Carter Administration's faulty energy program has fired inflation even more.

Bush argues that we might be overregulating coal, that despite the Three Mile Island accident, nuclear development must continue, and that more leadership of the kind Carter showed in visiting the Three Mile Island plant is sorely needed.

"Regretably, Carter is a totally ineffective leader," Bush says. "There is a mounting perception of incompetence in his Administration, a feeling he is not up to the job. He vacillated on Taiwan, on the Shah of Iran, on deploying the neutron weapon and on Cuba. He's really weak on Afrlen. How can we hold back Rhodesia for two Marxist-Leninist leaders, Nkomo and Mugabe, who are like piranhas in the bathtub?

"On inflation, if it remains double-digit, Carter will go to wage and price controls, and loosen up federal spending to satisfy liberals. Teddy Kennedy harasses him from the left, and that plagues Carter."

Bush seems like confidence itself. "I've always been a leader," he says, without a trace of Texas accent, though he's lived there 30 years. "I was the youngest (18) Navy combat pilot in World War II. I was captain of my baseball team (national champions) at Yale. I was one of the few Republicans to get elected to Congress in Texas. And I'm glad I ran the CIA. It's a monumental plus because people in this country want a CIA and an FBI. And I'm glad I served in China because that's paying off for us, too.

"I'm going all out in this presidential thing because we've got to get people feeling pride and confidence in their country again."

The energy shortage: Part 2

Although the gas shortage hasn't hit Northern Michigan – and hopefully it won't – the impact of the shortage is being felt. Motel rooms are empty; campsites are empty; Mackinac Bridge traffic is down. Something has to be done very soon if we are going to salvage this tourist season.

I was recently asked to join a special task force to be made up of 10 Democrat and 10 Republican Congressmen. The charge of this task force is to study some immediate ways to alleviate the gasoline shortage and the impact it is having on people and business all across this country. It is my hope that we can come up with some good conservation measures and a plan to disseminate pertinent information on the shortage. We must find a means of letting people know that we have gas up north, and encourage them to make the trip.

Your community also might want to consider drawing up a plan to make your area more attractive to tourists. One good idea is to encourage local residents to buy their gas Monday through Thursday, and leave the stations free for tourists on the weekends. I would be very happy to pass them on to the other task force members.

As a member of the House Subcommittee on Energy Development and Applications of the Science and Technology Committee, I was recently given the opportunity to study some new models of electric cars – to sit in them and even drive them. Electric cars are good possible alternatives to gasoline-powered engines, but there is still a lot of work that must be done on them before they will become really practical. The cost is still relatively high, and batteries would have to be replaced approximately every 18 months at a cost of $1400. Another drawback is that these cars would not be practical in an area such as ours because they can only travel about 40 miles between charges. However, they would be very useful in city driving, and would therefore help to lessen our overall dependence on oil.

Despite the fact that all of the talk seems to be centering on gasoline shortages, we also need to come up with alternatives for all types of oil-dependent energy production.

Because we are virtually surrounded by water in Northern Michigan, our area would be an excellent place to further develop and expand hydro-electric power plants. We also need to look more closely at wind and solar energy sources. Just this week Michigan was awarded a Department of Energy grant of over a million dollars to continue operating the Central Solar Energy Research Corporation in the Detroit area. It is very important to study the feasibility of solar power in an area with fewer than average hours of sunlight, less intense sunlight, and longer, colder winters.

We also cannot discount the importance of nuclear energy at this time. Although I have some reservations about the disposal of nuclear waste, and some concerns about the safety of nuclear generating plants, I feel that we have no means of replacing the valuable power we are now getting from this source. We depend upon nuclear power today, and I think this source will continue to play an important rule in energy resources for years to come.

Wood plays an important role as an alternative fuel for heating homes in our area. This summer would be a good time to stock up on wood if you have a wood-burning stove, or think about installing one if you do not have one. Just remember to take all of the necessary safety precautions in installing and operating a wood stove.

I am confident that by making the best use of a combination of all of these alternatives, we can substantially reduce our dependence on foreign oil and develop a means whereby future generations will not be subject to the energy crisis as we know it.

Bob Davis represents the 11th District in the United States Congress.

Education Bill Passes

The Legislature is currently in the midst of its annual rush to appropriate the billions of dollars needed to run Michigan's government. The goal set by the House-Senate leadership is to finish consideration of all money bills by the middle of July so that the Legislature can recess for the remainder of the summer.

Among the items labored over each year which attract a lot of behind-the-scenes high-powered lobbying is the bill to fund the operation of the state's many universities and colleges.

As might be expected, each institution believes it case for gaining more monies from the state treasury is the strongest. Yet, funds are limited each year and those of us who sit in the Legislature must make the final decisions as to which institution needs more assistance in a particular year.

As college enrollments continue to decline in the years ahead, this process will, I suspect, become even more troublesome and may even result in some drastic curtailments at some colleges and universities.

Last week the House approved a bill which would appropriate $685.3 million for 13 four-year degree-granting institutions of higher learning. Increases recommended over last year's appropriation vary from a low of 9.8% for Western Michigan University at Kalamazoo to a high of 13.2% at Sault Ste. Marie's Lake Superior State College.

Though the details of the bill must still be hammered out in a joint House-Senate conference committee to resolve the differences between the two houses, the final figures sent to Governor Milliken for his approval are not likely to change that much.

Here is a run down on how the various state-supported colleges and universities fared in the bill passed by the House last week.

Central Michigan University received a 10.1% increase, which translates into $2,733,500 more for the 1979-80 fiscal year. Eastern Michigan University was awarded $3,195,300, or a 10% raise.

At Big Rapids, Ferris State College won an 11.5% increase for $2,298,500 more, while Grand Valley State College in Grandville received 11.3% more, or $1,370,300.

The three Upper Peninsula institutions all received increases in excess of 10%. As noted, Lake Superior State College won the largest increase – 13.2% for a boost of $1,165,300 while Northern Michigan University at Marquette settled for an 11.2% increase of $2,141,000. Michigan Technological University was awarded a $2,155,600 boost, or 11.2%.

Oakland University received an even 10% increase of $1,819,200, while Saginaw Valley State College won the second largest increase of the 13 institutions, gaining a 12.9% boost worth $782,200.

The state's three largest universities, Michigan State University, the University of Michigan and Wayne State University received increases totaling $38,670,000. MSU won a 10.8% boost of $14,382,000 U of M got an 11.2% increase of $15,068,800, and Wayne State was awarded a 10.3% increase, good for $9,228,900 more in state funds.

The University of Michigan's branch campuses at Dearborn and Flint are treated as separate colleges for the purpose of appropriations. The Dearborn unit was given a 10.6% increase of $906,000, and the Flint campus received $872,800, an 11.1% raise.

Finally, Western Michigan University received the 9.8% increase of $201,300 mentioned earlier.

As sent to the conference committee, the increases in higher education

The question citizens and legislators alike will have to answer in future years is can we afford to fund these increases if college enrollments are significantly smaller than they used to be.

It's an area that will definitely merit close scrutiny.

Dale Boss talks about his pioneer Charlevoix family

By Peg Ohle

Dale Boss is a descendant of two pioneer Charlevoix County families. This week the Courier talks with him about his ancestors, his own family, and some of his other interests.

COURIER: There are 16 Boss families in the Charlevoix telephone book. Do you all have a common ancestor?

BOSS: Yes, we are all descended from my great grandfather, John Boss, who came to the area 97 years ago. He came to this country from the Netherlands and settled for about three years in the Dutch country in southwestern Michigan. Then he heard that this north country was the place to be, so he moved up here.

COURIER: How many children did your great grandfather have?

BOSS: He had two sons and two daughters when the family moved here, and later they had two more sons and a daughter.

COURIER: Where was the Boss family farm?

BOSS: In Marion Township. It's now part of Friske Orchards.

COURIER: What about your maternal ancestors?

BOSS: My maternal great grandfather, Maurice Chew, forded the Pine River 100 years ago on the way to his farm in Hayes Township. The house was on Maple Grove Road just up from Old US-31 Highway. He was County School Commissioner at one time.

COURIER: Do the Bosses ever have family reunions?

BOSS: We had one in 1973 in East Jordan. More than 100 direct descendants were there.

COURIER: What business are you in?

BOSS: That's a good question. In 1974, I was in five different businesses in Charlevoix, and I was a very busy person, much involved. Even though I had 36 people working for me, I liquidated everything except the house rental business. I had delivered milk since I was 12 years old and had my own insurance agency for 21 years. Now I'm doing what ideally everyone should do between the ages of 40 and 50 – stop and take a good look at themselves and the world and decide what they want to do. My priorities are different from most people's, who consider their job number one. My first priority is Christ, then family, then job.

As far as family is concerned, no matter how busy I was, if any of my children needed help, I would take time to give it to them. Then, too, my parents taught me to work and I have taught my children to work, that there are dividends from working. I've always had a deep concern for young people and want to make the community a better place for them, probably because I had such a good childhood myself. I always say we don't have juvenile delinquents, just parents who don't spend time with their children.

COURIER: You're interested in local history, too, aren't you?

BOSS: Yes. A lot of people don't know where they came from or where they're going. I've often quizzed older people on what things were like before I was born. Ralph Bechtel, especially, has told me many, many things. I found and placed the stone marker on the graves of the 13 survivors of the Champlain fire. I also built the Centennial float for the celebration on Memorial Day weekend. It took more hours than framing a six-room house, but it will be used many times more. As a child I worked for Ann Harsha and more recently talked with her about donating her home to the Historical Society, which she did. I'm a director of the Charlevoix Historical Society. Another thing – I heard the city was going to tear down the Boy Scout cabin which was built in 1936 at Mt. McSauba. We hope to be able to save it so it can be used for a day camp and for cross country skiers.

COURIER: Do you like to travel?

BOSS: Yes, but since gas has become so high, we've been limiting our trips to 50 miles from home. Two years ago, I took 11 members of our family on a 34-day trip to California. We had a 28-foot motor home with two motorcycles. We do everything as a family.

COURIER: How many children do you have?

BOSS: I married my high school sweetheart, Marilyn Ikens, and we have five children of our own as well as two foster children. We've also had two exchange students.

COURIER: Where are the children now?

BOSS: Sharon (Mrs. Charles Elzinga) teaches in the Jackson school system, Diane lives at home and teaches in Charlevoix, Dale Jr. and Jim both live at home and are in the insulating business, and Pam just completed her first year at North Central Michigan College. (Pam was last year's Venetian Queen and first runnerup in this year's National Cherry Pageant). Our foster daughter, Kathy Van Zant, is now Mrs. Robert Castelein and lives in Petoskey, and our other foster daughter, Kay Van Zant, is Mrs. Dave Falting and lives in East Jordan.

COURIER: What haven't I asked that you would like to say?

BOSS: Well, I'm a member of the Assembly of God Church and served on the Charlevoix School Board eight years, during which the new elementary school and the new library were built. I'm an avid outdoorsman and camper. My wife and I often go out into the woods at six o'clock on Sunday mornings just to watch and listen. I like antique and classic autos. My sons and I own several convertibles, but we've also sold several due to lack of storage space. For relaxation I pick up a hammer and saw.

COURIER: Anything else?

BOSS: People who know me know I'm an outspoken person. I tell things the way they are – if they're good, I praise them to high heaven, and if they're bad, I say so. One thing that bothers me is that people don't have much interest in local government any more, no enthusiasm. Consequently, important things are not getting done. There are too many talkers and no doers. We didn't even have candidates for city offices in Charlevoix this year. There should always be competition for offices. People are just not getting involved at the grass roots level.

Charlevoix: 100 years ago

A petition for a new sidewalk was considered by trustees of the Village of Charlevoix when they met July 12, 1879.

Five resident owners "prayed" that a sidewalk be built on the south side of Main Street from the west line of Bridge Street to the east line of the block.

After due consideration, Trustee Eaton moved that the sidewalk "be built of two inch pine plank to be placed on stringer four inches by four inches."

However, Trustee Smith disagreed. He moved that the material be "either hemlock or pine to be laid crosswise".

Trustee Eaton's suggestion prevailed.

Anniversaries

Mr. and Mrs. Albert H. Lehman observed their golden wedding anniversary on Tuesday, July 3, at Grandvue Medical Care Facility where Mrs. Lehman is a patient since suffering a stoke earlier this year.

In a touching ceremony in the sunroom at the Facility, Mr. Lehman and the former Estelle Everts renewed their marriage vows before the Rev. Daniel Miner of the United Methodist Church of East Jordan in the presence of their family and close friends.

A reception followed.

The couple spoke their first vows at a quiet ceremony at Newport, Ky., at the time when Mr. Lehman was employed in the automobile industry in Detroit and she was a teacher at River Rouge. In 1943 they left southern Michigan for Munising on Lake Superior where he was a commercial fisherman and she an elementary school teacher. Later he became a charter boat operator out of the Lake Superior port and custodian of the school. In the early 1960's they retired and, in 1963, came to Charlevoix to make their home at 203 Lewis St. Until last year, Bert planted and cared for a large garden and Mrs. Lehman prepared the food for freezing and canning. Most winters they spent several months in California.

Mrs. Lehman was born at Barnard in Charlevoix County in 1900. She was graduated from Pilgrim Holiness College in Kingswood, Ky., and from Eastern Michigan University. She taught for 33 years before retiring. She is a member of the United Methodist Church. Mr. Lehman was born in Tunbridge Wells, County Kent in England in 1900 and came to Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1916.

They have one daughter, Mrs. David (Judy A.) Hendrickson of Appleton, Wis., and four grandchildren.

You can make sure right now that

GAS WILL BE PLENTIFUL

Gas lines are not necessary.
Gasoline prices should come down.

There's no energy shortage in America. Today... tomorrow... or a thousand years from now. There's just a shortage of energy common sense.

Common sense tells us that if the world's supply of oil will be gone in our lifetime, we must right now start using our unlimited coal supplies... we must right now use more natural gas. Instead, we force industry to compete with the car owner for gasoline by preventing them from using other forms of energy.

Let's take industry off the gasoline line right now!

We must make the politicians aware that we want them to act right now. To change our energy policy right now. They must give encouragement, aid and tax incentives which will get industry to convert from the oil which you need for your car to abundant natural gas and coal.

When politicians want to, they can act fast. (Look how fast they passed odd-even license plate laws and half-gallon pricing.)

Typical ways to ease industry off the use of motorists' oil are to

- Ease the restrictions on use of coal.
- Ease the restrictions on mining coal.
- Ease the roadblocks on pipelines to move coal as semi-liquid sludge (in spite of the railroads' opposition to losing their more expensive coal shipping business).
- Ease the restrictions on industrys' use of lower grade oil, to free the better grades needed for gasoline.

The benefits to you from all this will be more gas, at lower cost for your car. Lower home prices for gas and electricity. Lower prices for all of the products you buy. (The high cost of the type of energy industry is now forced to use is a big reason for today's inflation.)

But you can benefit only if you act now to wake up your voices in government.

Please use the coupon below to tell those who represent you that they must act right now.

CHIP Center offers family counseling

Ellen Snyder, 14, was having behavior problems that alarmed her parents and school authorities. Her parents took her to CHIP Counseling Center in Charlevoix, seeking advice.

After the first session CHIP therapists determined the problems were not Ellen's alone, but a question of who was exercising the authority and discipline in the Snyder home.

During subsequent sessions at CHIP, the adults in the Snyder family met with Ellen and CHIP therapists, to talk about their relationships and role at home.

Changes were suggested by ther therapist, emphasizing that Ellen's parents should not only take the lead in disciplining their children, but should exercise their parental authority in support of one and another.

That fictionalized case illustrates the relatively new field of Family Therapy.

"Family Therapy is one of many approaches CHIP counselors use," Terry Smith, Chip Center Counselor explained.

Smith has just returned from a week-long symposium at the University of Michigan where he attended seminars on Family Therapy.

"When we work with the whole family we can find out what changes, if any, are necessary to the family system," he continued as he explained the basics of Family Therapy.

Smith compared a family system to a Rube Goldberg toy, where marbles roll, bells clang, buckets turn and so on. The success of the toy depends on the smooth functioning of each part.

"The whole, of a family system, is greater than the sum of its individuals," Smith observed.

"But the individual will have the symptoms of problems. The family system exists before therapy. Our job is to see if there are problems in the way the individuals are working together."

It is not usual, he explained, for one member of a family to seek help or be referred to a counseling center because he or she has problems. And often the problems that individual suffers are not his or hers alone, but just symptoms of some problem in the functioning of the family system.

"An individual may recognize there is a problem, but cannot figure out how or when or what corrections to make," the therapist said.

"The therapist becomes an objective outsider, intimately involved as an observer. The therapist can diagnose the problem and recommend changes.

"Sometimes what seem like slight changes in the way members of a family deal with each other will account for significant change," Smith added.

In the fictional case of the Snyder family, Ellen did not know who was the authority in the family. Her problem was not hers alone, Smith pointed out. Ellen's father and mother were living with Ellen's mother's father. Used to exercise authority, the grandfather was quick to discipline his grandchildren Ellen's father had abdicted to his father-in-law.

CHIP Counselors met with all three adults and Ellen. Grandfather was encouraged to grandparent, not parent, the children. The parents were encouraged to spend more time alone together and support each other as the authority figures in the home.

As these changes were made, grandfather relaxed, the parents worked together on the household rules and discipline, supporting each other, and the children, especially Ellen, recognized that they were responsible to their parents.

Ellen's behavior at home and school changed as well. While she continued to work through her adolescent rebellion, she behaved more predictably and was less self-destructive.

Using this fictionalized version of a real case, Counselor Smith said, "The important thing in Family Therapy is to change the system. In this case each adult was playing distressful roles. Ellen's behavior problems were in reaction to the tensions and confusions within their family system."

Smith reiterated, Family Therapy is just one of many methods of counseling used at the CHIP Center. During initial visits clients and counselors try to arrive at the best method for solving the individual's problems.

Historical Society elects W.W. Price as president

Members of the Charlevoix Historical Society elected new officers at their annual meeting last week.

W. W. Price will serve another year as president; Dale Boss will serve as vice-president; Robert C. Miles will serve as second vice-president; Mary M. Geiken will serve as secretary; and Ralph S. Hamilton will serve as treasurer.

Mrs. Edward Shanahan was elected to a two-year term as director, and Myrtle Fulton and Edward Heise, Jr. were elected to three-year terms.

Hold-over directors are Mrs. Arthur Stoel, Mrs. Ben Gill, and Robert Morgridge. Ed Beutner also serves on the Board of Directors as immediate past president.

President Price outlined plans for the First Annual Heritage Day Luncheon, to be held July 27 at the Grey Gables Inn. Tickets are available from officers of the Society. Reservations will be limited to 100.

The purpose of the luncheon, according to Price, is to honor a member or members of the Society who have contributed importantly to historical research and preservation of the Charlevoix area.

Recent acquisitions of the Society were on display at last week's meeting. They included a miniature album of early Charlevoix lithographs contributed by George Secord of East Jordan and a watercolor painting by Rosa Nettletoo contributed by Mr. and Mrs. Richard Fochtman.

Class of 1926 offers more local history

This is the second installment of a history of Charlevoix written by the local history class of the Charlevoix High School in 1926. It is reprinted from the November 17, 1926 issue of the Courier:

In the course of the following summer, after the Mormons erected their death gallows, Mr. William Sterling and family arrived here from Elk Rapids. After the arrival of Sterling, Messrs. Dixon and Sterling conceived the project of building a saw mill on Pine River. It was proposed to build a dam on the lower river, at some point between Round Lake and Lake Michigan. It was thought advisable that the margin of the stream and of Round Lake should first be cleared of driftwood and fallen timber, which could be conveniently accomplished by the aid of a scow. Accordingly, a quantity of clear stiff pine plans for the scow were brought from Elk Rapids and piled upon the banks of the river for future use.

Some time later, when both men were away, leaving the women and children alone, some lumber was stolen from the fishermen's supply. Mrs. Sterling and Mrs. Dixon spent the remainder of the night in watching, fearing violence from the Mormon thieves. Early the following morning, Mrs. Dixon, leaving Mrs. Sterling and the children behind, set out on foot, for her journey to Bear Creek (Petoskey), armed with a pistol, in hopes of securing aid. The distance was fully eighteen miles, which trip she followed the beach to reach her destination. When within three miles of Bear Creek, after her travel through dense woods and tangled swamp, she came upon an inhabited wigwam and she was given a little boy to go with her as guide to the house of Mr. Porter.

After reaching there, it was decided that three Indians should man one of their boats and return with Mrs. Dixon immediately. The party was not long in getting off, and they arrived at Pine River about nine o'clock in the evening.

During Mrs. Dixon's absence, Mrs. Sterling had adopted an artifice to deceive the enemy with a false show of force. Disguising herself in her husband's clothes, she walked about where she would be likely to be seen by some of the Mormons, changing the suit several times in the course of the day to give the impression that there were several men stopping at the house.

The next morning, Messrs. Dixon and Sterling resolved to make an effort to recover the stolen property.

They went up Pine Lake and meeting two Mormons questioned them, but they denied all knowledge of the missing property. At the mouth of Porter's Creek, the lumber was found on the beach, but the boat could not be found. They took the lumber and prepared to return, but Mr. Sterling wished to remain, saying that he hoped to kill the Mormons and recover the stolen boat.

During Mr. Sterling's stay at Pine River, he was inclined to resort to sanguinary measures in the contest with the Mormons, but was over-ruled by the milder counsels of Mr. Dixon. Finally, convinced that the project of building the mill could not be carried out in peace, Mr. Sterling dissolved his connection with Mr. Dixon, and left the place.

In the meantime, the Mormons at Porter's Creek commenced a suit against Dixon and Sterling, before a Mormon justice of the peace at Pine River, for the value of the timber they had seized and brought home. The defendants, thinking the plaintiffs would have everything their own way in the trial, thought it better to settle the claim by paying for their own property than to risk the probable result. The matter was accordingly arranged to the satisfaction of the Mormons.

Mr. Dixon, having become thoroughly discouraged by the constant annoyance of the vallainous Mormons, sent for a steamer, which soon arrived and took away Mrs. Dixon and family to Northport, who were in a few weeks joined by Mr. Dixon.

Christian Scientists offer lecture

Sponsored jointly by members of the Traverse City and Glen Arbor Christian Science churches, a free lecture entitled, "There's Only One Real Ego", will be given at First Congregational Church on Monday, July 16, at 8 p.m.

The lecturer, William Milford Correll, C.S.B., a member of the Christian Science Board of Lectureship, will explain that the sense of being loved and valued, and the feeling of well-being this brings, comes from the understanding that we are not cut off from God.

"This close relationship between God and man must be understood so that we can identify ourselves correctly and realize the heritage of the sons and daughters of God," according to the lecturer.

A graduate of Oberlin College, Correll is a practitioner and teacher of Christian Science, and has served as Reader, as an Associate Editor of the church's religious periodicals, and has participated in Christian Science radio and TV programs describing how Christian Science heals.

State lowers wood license fees

A bill dramatically lowering license plate fees for wood harvesting vehicles was signed into law Tuesday by Governor William G. Milliken. .

Sponsored by State Representative Steve Andrews (R-Wolverine), the new law will save wood harvesters up to $.46 per hundred weight in license fees.

"This new law will have a direct impact on the pocket books of those people who environmentally thin our forests," Andrews said. "It is a tribute to the Legislature and the Governor that they recognized the inequity in the license structure and moved quiekly to rectify it."

Andrews explained that trucks and other equipment used in timber harvesting were required to pay regular commercial rates, rather than the lower agricultural rates levied on farm vehicles.

"Wood harvesting is clearly an agricultural task," Andrews said. "Yet under the previous law, harvesters were unfairly penalized when they went to buy their license plates.

"Under the new law, wood harvesters will pay $.74 per hundred weight in license fees rather than commercial fees' ranging from $1.06 to $1.20 per hundred weight. They will receive a significant financial benefit, and it is one they have long deserved."

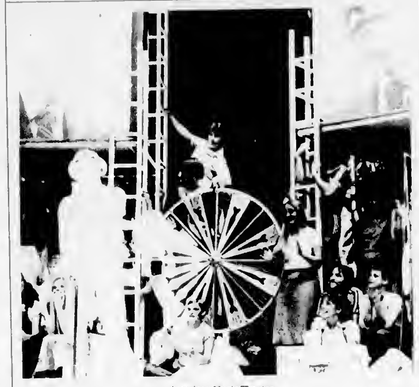
Music Review



American Music Theater

By Anne Kelly

We northerners may be starved fur entertainment all winter, but come summer there's lots to be had within a reasonable radius. Every year, like most of our neighbors and friends, we take out our summer calendar and start reserving nights and week ends for relatives, guests and our own personal pleasure. There's the Cherry County Playhouse, Interlochen, Concerts at the Castle with maybe a trip to Pine Nob for another, various dinner theaters around town, Mackinac Island, local home town festivals, and what summer season would be complete without taking in at least one performance of The Young Americans.

I never cease to be amazed by the professionalism of every show – lighting, costuming, choreography, and stage personality – The American Music Theater is first class entertainment by anyone's standards. We are privileged that they have chosen Petoskey as home summer base.

I caught the final performance of "A Salute to Richard Rogers" Sunday night. It only whetted my appetite to see more. The show itself opened in Petoskey last season then hit the road throughout the year. What we were enjoying was the sum total of over 200 performances in 179 cities throughout the country. An original Young Americans tribute produced by Milton Anderson. "A Salute to Richard Rogers" took the audience on a nostalgic journey back over the musical career of one of the greatest and most productive American songwriters of all times. With over 1000 tunes to choose from, The Young Americans did up about 50 in fine style. Featuring musical selections from "South Pacific," "The King and I," "The Sound of Music," "Allegro", "Flower Drum Song," "Oklahoma," and more, the cast sang and danced its way with boundless enthusiasm into the evening and into the hearts of the audience. It happens every time!

The Young Americans will be presenting three plays, "Guys and Oolls," "Gypsy," and "Fiddler on the Roof," as well as their annual variety special "An Evening With The Young Americans." They also offer dinner theater performances at Boyne Highlands, and new this season, Mackinac Island.

The Young Americans have got to be ranked as the finest family entertainment available anywhere. The shows are always wholesome, fast moving, entertaining and delightful. When attending with guests of the older set, I find myself regretting not having brought the kids. When we take the kids, I keep wishing my mother or Aunt Matilda was along. Better play it safe, reserve tickets for the whole crew and have fun!

Wedding

Lickfelt-Hosmer

Doris M. Lickfelt and Mark E. Hosmer were married Saturday afternoon, June 30, in Christ Episcopal Church in Charlevoix.

Both bride and bridegroom make their home in Lansing. Mrs. Robert Lickfelt, Sr., is also a resident of Lansing, as was her late husband. The bridegroom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Max Hosmer of Charlevoix.

Large baskets of daisies and small clusters of daisies on each pew decorated the church as the Reverend Roger Ames performed the double-ring rites.

Given in marriage by her brother, Robert Lickfelt, Jr., the bride wore a gown of ivory organza with long fitted sleeves, empire waistline, and a high neckline edged with antique lace above the netted yoke. Venice lace, sequins, and pearls decorated the bodice and sleeves. A chapel-length train and matching picture hat completed the costume.

Robin J. Lickfelt, niece of the bride, served as maid of honor, and Laurel Lickfelt and Peggy Hosmer were bridesmaids. The attendants wore floor-length jade greeen gowns fashioned in polyester knit. An ivory yoke constructed of Brussels lace was also repeated in the gowns' short sleeves. A blouson bodice met the yoke and flowed into a slightly gathered skirt. They carried small baskets of yellow and white daisies.

John M. Cinnamon served the bridegroom as best man, Ronald Winchester and Scott Boss were

Skrzeczkoski - Borths

Doris Skrzeczkoski became the bride of Charles A. Borths Saturday afternoon, June 30, at St. Mary's Catholic Church in Charlevoix.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Endries of Spencer, Wisconsin, and her bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Angeline Borths of Charlevoix.

The bride was given in marriage by her father before an altar dccorated with yellow daisies and white carnations. Approximately 100 guests witnessed the double-ring ceremony performed by Father R. Dale Magoon.

For her wedding, the bride chose a long gown of off-white voile, with which she wore an arm-length veil decorated with white daisies. She carried a bouquet of yellow daisies and yellow roses.

Mrs. Robert Borths served as matron of honor, and Mrs. Darrell Van Loo as bridesmaid. They wore long gowns of light blue voile, trimmed in white. Their bouquets were of yellow daisies and roses tied with brown ribbons.

Barbara Skrzeczkoski's flower girl costume was similar to those of the attendants, and she carried a basket of flowers.

David Lavake, newphew of the bridegroom, served as ringbearer.

Robert Borths, brother of the bridegroom, served as best man, and James Borths, another brother, was groomsman. Herb Endries, brother of the bride, and Richard Borths, another brother of the bridegroom, seated the guests.

Organ and vocal music for the ceremony was provided by Marina La Blance.

The new Mr. and Mrs. Borths hosted the wedding reception at the American Legion Hall. Assisting them were Mrs. Madlyn Renaud, who cut the cake, and Mrs. Robert Borths, who attended the guest book. The bridegroom's mother hosted the rehearsal dinner Friday evening at the Weathervane Inn.

The newly-weds have delayed a wedding trip and are now at home on Stover Road in Charlevoix. The bridegroom is a truck driver for Coca-Cola, and the bride is a waitress at Leutheuser's Restaurant.

Engagement

Mrs. Milnda Martin of Dkemns announces the engagement of her daughter, Debra K. Williams, to Mark D. Cockfield, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Cockfield of Charlevoix.

The bride-to-be is a 1979 graduate of Ferris State Collegc and is presently employed as asststant manager of the County Seat store in Meridian Mall, Okemos.

Her fiance is a student at Ferris State College, majoring in data processing.

The wedding will take place during the summer of 1980, after which the couple plan to live in the East Lansing area.

FAITH MAKES GOOD NEIGHBORS OF GREAT NATIONS

The boundary line dividing two countries can become a barricade of mutual hostility, but in the case of Canada and the United States it has always served as a bridge of friendship between two peoples with such trust, respect and understanding as to make the celebration of Canada U.S. Goodwill Week quite unnecessary. Nowhere along the three thousand mile borderline that spans our continent have security measures ever been needed, and the citizens on both sides may enter and leave each other's land whenever they wish. This is a fine example of the spirit of brotherhood that has been taught by every religious faith, in every land. Wherever you live, you will learn this by attending the Church of your choice.

"Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. Love worketh no ill to his neighbor: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law."
-Romans 13:9, 10

A living proof to all the world of faith in brotherhood.
-Guy Willis Bilsland

Music Review

"Days Gone Down"
Gerry Rafferty
c. 1979 Gerry Rafferty Music PRS

"Days Gone Down"
Still got that light in your eyes and our day is comin by and by
I'm travelin this long road here with you
Still got a long way, we still got a long way to go

The first time I set eyes on you
f listened to you sing
we didn't have to speak cause the words said everything
Yes, you walked right into my life and we were on our way
It was so fong ago but it feels like yesterday.

We won't forget the days gone down
you ring in our hearts
And we're as much in tune as we were out at the start
It all seems so much harder now it seemed so easy then and someday we miglit find we would do it all again

"Still Got That Light"

What is 93, young and still in love? There's an answer to this riddle because I know Ed. Although he doesn't realize it, he's made an impression on all of us whose lives he's touched. He has provided the secret formufa for growing old gracefully.

Ed began keeping company with my mother soon after Dad died. His own wife had been gone for some time and he bought companionship and affection back into both of their lives. Although many years her senior, Ed was just automatically accepted into our family, if not as a romantic suitor, then as a substitute grandfather. No one believed he was in his 80's. Ed was so energetic and enthusiastic that he fooled everyone by at least 10 to 15 years. ft was Ed who helped construct the finishing touches on the girl's doll house and Ed who could be seen playing baseball on the front lawn of Grandma's house with our boy. And it was Uncle Ed, as the kids affectionately called him, who slipped them nickels for the gum ball machine and was available for the endless walks around the block.

Ed celebrated his 90'th birthday with us a few years ago and had to present his driver's license for credibility before being entitled to the free ice cream sundae for those 90 and up, offered by our local ice cream parlor. He polished it off before the kids finished their cones.

There's a certain light in Ed's eyes that I've come to admire as a symbol of the fact that age has nothing to do with being young and in love. Being young, as someone once profoundly put it, is a state of mind and there is no age limit to falling in love.
